

Draconian Desire

Written by Amethyst Mare (Arian Mabe)

“Get back!”

Dana threw her paws up in the air and bared her teeth at the dragon that defied her. The size of a large, draft horse, he towered over her small stature and swung his long tail defiantly. Sunlight glinted off his green scales and he lowered his head threateningly, smoke curling from his nostrils. A traditional western standing on four legs, he boasted a pair of leathery wings that were currently bound to his back, defying flight that would grant escape. Dana, the tawny furred coyote, had already had one escapee – thankfully retrieved – within the last month and she certainly was not angling for another. Perhaps she should not have taken the job at the training farm after all.

The dragon tossed his head defiantly and advanced on her, wings strained against the bondage. Coolly, Dana uncurled the long whip and flicked it out against his side – a training device more commonly used around horses. The very tip of it kissed his scales and sent the dragon scuttling to the side, claws tearing great rifts in the sand.

“Jesus Christ, Lancelot!” Dana snarled and threw the whip aside.

It hit the fence with a wooden clatter and tumbled to the sand in a flurry of yellow dust.