

over the rink beyond the windows, which ran the full length of the bar cafe.

"So... How do you feel about ice hockey?"

Darren broke the silence, rubbing a the condensation off his glass in a series of downward strokes, turning it to catch every side.

"It's interesting enough, I guess."
 I hadn't know where to start.

"You've got to have some pretty damn good skating skill to do well at it."

"Hah! We wish! To which I mean, not necessarily."

~~water not being taken at once to the top of the hill
after which it~~

water being at the top of the hill
"The ground is"

water being at the top of the hill
"The ground is"

water being at the top of the hill
"The ground is"

water being at the top of the hill
"The ground is"

Chuckling, the wolf shook his head.

"What do you mean?" Liam asked.

"People join our team to play, not skate. Some don't get that the two go hand in hand." He grinned. "Even if we are only an amateur team."

"Oh really now?" The other raised an eyebrow, eyes glinting mischievously.

"Would have thought you were a pro from how you acted outside the rink."

Daren had the good grace to appear ashamed and rubbed his nose, sniffing as if the cold had made it mm.

