

"A name can't be that hard to give."

The wolf barked a laugh, shoulders relaxing as his tongue lolled from his ~~own~~ muzzle.

"I'm Darrin, if that makes any difference."

"Liam," the other conceded grudgingly, hefting his skates over one arm; ~~so that~~ they dangled by the laces.

Darrin tilted his head to one side, appearing thoughtful rather than cute.

"Odd accent. You're not from Brrn, are you?"

Liam rolled his eyes.

(24)

"Long a) back that of the same A"

which found a better place at
and still longer and so greater
... again ... and

... that if ... "I'm
..."

... with the "and"
... and ... and ...
... and ... and ...

... to back ... and
... and ... and ...

... the ... and ...
... and ... and ...

... and ... and ...

"Nope."

"Where then?" Darver persisted.

Casting a sidelong look into the rink just visible through a window on the interior doors, him sighed. The zamboni was already out -

(I) Fuck... (15)

"You don't half ask a lot of questions."

"Salesfur problem. I like to get people talking."

He grinned.

"Aren't you going on the ice then?
How do you get on this late?"

"right"

between correct "right" and "wrong"

this all the school students are asked to answer in front of others. They get happy and make noise when
- the teacher is wrong.

(2) Now (2)

if the teacher is wrong, not
"wrong".

They are told "wrong" and "right"
publicly.

They are asked to say "right" and "wrong"

and that is the way it is.

Must cost a fucking fortune."

"I work there." Liam frowned; the light was fading, all too swift for the end of summer. "Got to go now. Guess it was nice meeting you. I guess."

As he turned, the wolf stepped into his path, forehead ~~to~~ creaking.

"You're not skating anymore?"

"Zamboni's out," the other shrugged.
"What can I do?"

The wolf scratched his shoulder, ears drooping to the sides. Sighing, him crossed his arms, ~~skates away~~ as his skates knocked into his stomach.

"Well, sorry about that..." Danner trailed off. "Didn't mean to."

Liam flushed hot with a sudden rush of anger. Just who did this wolf think he was, sauntering around with his hockey bag and bluster? Why, he was all hot air with nothing to say! The other scowled darkly. If the wolf hadn't made him late, held him up, he could have been on the ice right now. What a bloody waste of time.

Shifting his weight from paw to paw, the wolf cleared his throat.

"Is something wrong?"

He blinked, appearing for a moment almost so naive that Liam felt a flash of guilt for looking it out on him. Really, the wolf didn't know any better.

"Nothing," Liam said curtly. "I never cared about your team. Just get out of my way."

Stunned, Darren did not react as Liam shoved past, knocking into the wolf's shoulder. His arm stung from the impact but he was too wound up to care. All he wanted to do was skate. Was that too much to ask?

Leaving the wolf lost for words, he stormed into the rink and slammed both sets of doors behind him. If he was lucky,

Kyle would still let him on the ice for a bet.

The problem was, he had not
had much good luck of late.

and that the above of
the 1st of May 1861

has been at some meeting of the school board and has been