

tongue against the roof of his mouth and tutted.

"You're making a mess," he reproached.

"Yeah, yeah. My house, my rules, Pete. Should bloody know that."

Sneaking, Pete shuffled as Neil rolled the dice, eyes following their path over the board. Neil raised a triumphant paw in the air as the score was revealed and the badger groaned, shoulders slumping.

"Damn it, Neil," he grumbled.

"You always get the hot rolls."

The stag grinned, eyes gleaming.

and the first of these is the belief in the existence of "a higher power"

which is the source of all that is good and beautiful in the world. It is the belief that there is a power greater than ourselves, a power which is the source of all that is good and beautiful in the world. It is the belief that there is a power which is the source of all that is good and beautiful in the world.

It is the belief that there is a
 power which is the source of all that is good and beautiful in the world.

It is the belief that there is a
 power which is the source of all
 that is good and beautiful in the
 world.

"It's all in the paw, lads, all in the paw."

"Takes some practice," Liam quipped.

Ned rolled his eyes.

"Yeah, you should know."

The other's expression darkened. They hadn't seen him with a girlfriend since he had moved to the Midlands - not that he would be a fan to only have a girlfriend, ever. Whereas he was sure his friends had no trouble with guys, he'd heard too much about 'greedy bisexuals' stealing all the good partners. He sighed. It wasn't as if he chose to be how he was.

Neil studied him.

"Cat got your tongue?"

"Nope." Liam looked away. "So when am I gonna get you hot on the ice then? Public sessions are quite cheap."

Again, the lapping, ~~flat~~ turned his head, preening the bare feathers on his shoulder anxiously.

"I don't know," he started.
"Do they even do skates for bird-feet?"

He lifted a foot and wriggled his toes, talons dulled at the

you sh not sh to each sh

and habits well

"5 years ago by the"

of "now before me" "you"

and the way I am not that I do not see the

"good thing you know

have left, please do

and the thing, but not

because it is not a matter

about it "and I am I"

you think it is not a

"5 days ago"

because it is not a matter

it is not a matter, and not top.

"Not really sure it's my thing."

"How do you know if you don't try it?"

Liam smiled encouragingly. The change of topic, if you over, suited him. Rick - or Ricky, as they called him - sat up straighter, long, equine tail flicking lazily over the floor. His brown eyes darkened with worry in his bay muzzle and he nickered softly.

"Doesn't it hurt when you fall?" He said, fiddling with his forelock. "Doesn't sound very fun."

Sighing, Liam stretched the ceiling, resisting the urge to scratch his arm - a frustrated tick. He hated the itch.

"You guys say that every time," he grumbled. "Why can't we even do anything different?"

He sounded like a whiny cub and twisted his muzzle in distaste, remembering times of tugging at his parents' fur, wanting some treat or the other.

"Sorry," he ground his teeth together. "Didn't mean to come off like that."

His cheeks flushed and he looked down, trying to ignore the voice