

Artistic Interpretation

The Creatures of her Imagination Release her Pleasure

Alis Mitsy

Hayley moaned, back arched up from the sofa as she allowed the draconic beast to ease his smouldering cock into her pussy. Too hot for mere flesh, the pleasantly heated shaft stretched her open wider and wider, burrowing deep into her snatch until he could push in no further. Forepaws curled around her thighs, the crimson dragon rumbled softly, tucking his nose down into the crook of her neck, eyes brimming over with desire and concern for his charge – the artist who had brought him to life as mere paint on a canvas

Her mind swam, barely able to comprehend what was happening. Truth be told, she'd almost put everything down to a dream or a bump on the head before the dragon had spread her open with that magnificent cock of his. She couldn't have imagined everything – not when he felt so simply real and solid against her, inside her. The young woman panted heavily, head back on a cushion that had somehow appeared between the back of her head and the arm of the sofa, her creations taking care of her as only they knew how.

The gryphon – the other creature she'd painted in a fit of passion – sprang onto the back of the sofa above her, cock slapping up against his belly as he swayed and squawked. Clearly indignant that the dragon was receiving all the attention while he was left neglected, he bowed down to Hayley's head, beak brushing over her face in what she abruptly realised was his version of a gryphon kiss. Her heart pounded and, without thinking, she cupped his beak in two hands and brought her lips to the edge of his beak.

His beak parted as if he had known all along what she wanted from him, tongue flicking out sensually against her lips. Human lips should not have meshed so well with a gryphon beak, but they made it work – somehow. Hayley groaned passionately, encircling his neck with her arms as the dragon slowly, caringly, began to thrust, taking her with deep, loving strokes. Whimpering, Hayley clung to the gryphon as if for an anchor in a storm, muscles trembling as sheer lust overtook all sensibilities she might have claimed to have.

For she knew in the back of her mind that the dragon and the gryphon would not be satisfied with her until she had experienced every pleasure they had in mind for her. And she did not mind that one bit. Not one bit at all.

*

Frowning at the screen of her laptop – really, a desktop would have been better at such a stage in her art career – Hayley sighed. Her small flat loomed on all sides, oppressive in its consistency with weak winter sunshine filtering in through the dirtied windows, which would have looked out onto the city if she'd ever bothered to enjoy them. She swung listlessly from side to side in her office chair, wincing as it creaked obnoxiously. That was just another thing that needed fixing in her broken life. It was a shame that she could hardly expect it to be done. She wouldn't even know where to start. What even was squeaking anyway? The wheels? The seat?

Growling, she tapped the nib of her pen on the side of her tablet, a battered piece of equipment that was giving up as she used it for an ever increasing number of graphical art gigs. One day, it would give up and then she would be forced to find something second hand to replace it, lest she be out of any chance of work – or at least work that paid something, if not very much – for longer.

She bit her lip, forcing her eyes to focus on the screen at all costs. No distractions. She couldn't afford them. Twiddling a strand of brown hair between her fingers, she sucked the ends, hazel eyes darting fretfully from one side of the screen to the other, taking in her design with too critical her eye. It was exactly what the client had asked for. She threw her hands up in the air and tossed her tablet on the desk, where it came to rest with a clatter. And it was all wrong! All of it! Nothing looked right!

Her eyes strayed to the easel, standing forlorn between the window and the scrappy old sofa that she never seemed to have the time to sit down on anymore. On the ledge at the base of the canvas, already set up for a project that was yet to be begun, rested a paintbrush, the bristles stiff and uncared for after her last painting session, oh so very long ago.

She screwed up her face. Just when had the last time been that she'd even stood before the canvas? The poor thing was probably covered with dust, hardly any use to anyone anymore. Her heart twisted. Just like her. Washed up and used up, just like her.

Swallowing hard, she forced the lump in her throat down. Hayley could not have said she wasn't well practiced in the motion, as it seemed as if she had to push down her inner self multiple times every single day. But she couldn't hold it back forever, anger and pain roiling in the bit of her stomach and bubbling up to the surface like lava.

She closed her eyes. It had all been so easy before. She didn't even have to think about what she was trying to create – it just happened. It may not all have been perfect the first time, but she got better and better as she kept going – and to keep going, creating, was all she'd needed to do back then. That was before she'd taken her passion and turned it into a career. She could still remember what it felt like to hold a stick of charcoal in her fingers, watching, amazed, as an image blurred into life before her very eyes, beautiful in its imperfection and her own unique style.

She closed one hand into a fist. If only she could do what she was passionate about again. But wishes didn't always come true the way people wanted them to. She understood that too late. Hayley turned away from her work and put the tablet and pen neat on the desk. It was always too late for her.

But she couldn't think like that. A muscle behind the young woman's eyebrow twitched and she thrust herself away from the rickety desk with a sharp 'tsk', standing abruptly and stretching her arms above her head. Her back cracked as she stretched and she grunted, hooded sweatshirt lopsided on her lithe frame. Looking down at herself, she frowned and pulled out the purple fabric from her body. Had she always been that thin?

But what could she do to change it? Pacing between the desk and the kitchen, her little flat flitted by her again and again, the possessions that she knew and loved – to varying degrees – cluttering her way. Tidying up was rarely on her schedule anymore, not with all the work she had to do. She gave a small, tight-lipped smile, looking out the window with her arms folded. That was one thing, at least, that she did not mind all that much.

Again, her eyes strayed to the easel, so forlorn all on its own. Unconsciously, her torso tipped towards it, slipper clad feet rooted in place as if sunk into the floorboards. Her fingers twitched. Just a half hour? A little bit of inspiration painting surely could do her no harm?

No. No, she had work to do. She frowned and rubbed her temples, hair falling into her face and sticking to her lips. She couldn't afford the time. She knew that. Her life was work now and passion was her work. Half-turning, she eyed her laptop, though didn't move a muscle, torn between where her heart led and where her mind wanted her.

But which to choose?

She was moving before her mind caught up with the motion of her body, picking up the brush and holding it between her fingers so easily that it was as if it had been perfectly designed to fit in her hand. The bristles were too stiff, but that didn't matter as she softened them down with water in a paint-stained glass, providing the coarse, background strokes that she needed for her base. She smiled to herself in the faint glow of light through the dirty window, drifting into a state of calm that she hadn't felt in...well...since she'd last stood before the easel. And painting came back to her as easily as returning to the arms of a long-lost friend. Almost too easily.

Brown and red, the splodges of paint on the canvas slowly took shape, becoming what she knew she had longed to paint all along. A gryphon and a dragon, as lifelike as the flat around her, were born from nothing but raw strokes of an untamed brush. She didn't know why they came to be, only that they did, the afternoon slipping on without her as she painted. Each scale on the dragon's crimson hide was lovingly defined and she exhaled softly as she painted a bright spot in the gryphon's beady eye. Brown feathers layered smoothly onto fur fluffed up against the cold as he leapt, winds outstretched to meet his dragon foe in combat. The dragon coolly stared up at his opponent, tail swinging as he parted his jaws in threat, the hint of flame licking right at the back of his throat.

And the characters were complete. Stepping back, Hayley scratched her nose and surveyed her creation, pushing her hair back from her shoulders. It was rough and coarse and not her best work, but it was better formed and had done more for her soul than any of those bloody graphic design gigs. She winced at her own blunt language and giggled, pressing her fingers to her lips. No one was there to see into her mind. No one knew what she was really thinking. She threw her arms out wide, paint dripping to the bare floorboards in need of polishing. Screw the gigs! Her heart pounded. Painting was what made her complete!

Grinning like a fool, she looked over her painting again, one hand outstretched as if she could reach out and touch the characters, feel their physical scales and feathers beneath her fingertips. She smiled, lips tugging up on one side in a shy half-smile. It was strange to feel so proud of her own work, but they just looked so real. Hayley shook her head. How could she not be proud of her creation?

And then the dragon blinked.

Shaking her head, Hayley rubbed the back of her hand across her eyes and stared hard at her painting. Maybe she really hadn't been getting enough sleep lately. Or perhaps it had been a trick of the light? Was there any way to tell? She laughed shakily and wagged her finger at the painting as if to tell it off for playing her for a fool.

"Paintings are not alive," she said aloud, her words stymied and hollow as if they were being recited by a less than adequate actor. "Nothing moved, nothing blinked."

She frowned, peering at the painting with a more critical eye.

"But the background will need doing..." Hayley tapped her chin with the brush, leaving a drop of red paint on the tiny cleft. "Where to put you guys... Where indeed."

And then everything moved quickly – too quickly for the naked eye to catch. In but a blur, a draconic head shot from the canvas, all glinting eyes and teeth gleaming with saliva. Hayley screamed and tumbled back, the floor connecting with her backside as she thrust herself from the suddenly horrific scene. She scrambled back, fear closing about her throat, as the shoulders and forelegs of the dragon followed, claws cutting through her floorboards and scoring large gouges that could not have been from her imagination alone.

As his scaled hide pushed out and out, bulging with muscle from the canvas' borders, a beak and head with feathery tufts where ears should have been joined it, the gryphon also making his appearance known. His brown feathers shone in evidence of his good health, amber eyes bright and eager as he licked the edge of his beak. Landing with a thump on the floor, the dragon groaned and stretched, flapping his wings as if he had been immobile for a very great span of time. The gryphon flitted down with a fair deal more grace, a lone feather fluttering down by his forepaws.

Hayley gaped, jaw slack and eyes wide. Fear rooted her in place, an icy hold around her heart keeping her in position against her will. She closed her eyes, ignoring the cold pric of tears. She had to be hallucinating, she just had to be! What had happened? Was she sick?

Why had she just seen a dragon and gryphon appear from nowhere? It couldn't be real – there was just no fucking way!

But she couldn't ignore what was right before her forever.

Raising his head, the dragon shook the line of spines running down the back of his neck from one side to the other. He grinned as well as a dragon could, bowing his head in a fashion that was only somewhat mocking.

“Right here would do us well enough, dear creator.”

Hayley whimpered. The dragon loomed over her, the size of a draft horse while his gryphon comrade bounded at his side, vibrating as if he had so much energy that it simply could not be contained. Back pressed to the wall, she shrank back on their approach, though there was nowhere to run that they would not catch her in a pathetically feeble amount of time.

“What...the fuck is going on?” She whispered, unable to force her voice to be any louder. “Who are you? Why are you here? What the hell is wrong with my head?”

She held up her hands, trying to block out the beasts before her.

“You can't be real, you can't be. This isn't real. None of this is real.”

Word followed word, but she wasn't convincing anyone or fooling herself – not truly. The dragon and the gryphon exchanged a look that she could not read, beast understanding beast as she never could. Hayley's breath caught in her throat. What if they were planning to eat her? Kill her? Her mind whirled with thoughts. Which one would be worse?

“Hayley, our darling, our sweet creator...”

The dragon curled around her like an enormous pet cat, slinking his tail around her legs. She flinched from his touch, but he gently drew her back into her side, not holding her in place, but insisting all the same that she feel his scales on her back. Stiff, Hayley held her hands over her mouth, holding back a scream that she knew would not save her. Who would hear? The complex of flats was mostly empty during the day and nobody would believe a crazy artist screeching about a dragon and a gryphon coming to eat her. She took a deep breath. Maybe she could shout about a fire instead. Would people take notice of that or leave her to burn?

Before her thoughts could spiral any more out of control, the dragon pushed his head under her arm, blinking up at her as he begged for attention just like a domestic cat. Hayley lifted her hand to pet him and only just caught herself in time. Her mind reeled. Just what was she thinking trying to put her hand on a dragon? Her lips twisted. Dragons didn't even exist! It was crazy! He'd bite her hand off and think nothing of it!

“Relax, dear creator,” he purred in as low and soothing a tone as it was possible for a dragon to make. “We are not here to harm you.”

The gryphon reared back on his hind legs and bobbed his muzzle, bouncing from paw to paw.

“No, we would never do that,” he squawked, pacing back and forth beyond the limit of the dragon's tail. “We have too much we need to give back to you, Hayley, for all that you have done for us in bringing life back to our limbs.”

“Then...” She found her voice, pulling it up shakily from her throat. “Why are you here? What are you? What's going on?”

Tilting his beak from side to side, the gryphon bounced and rolled his shoulders, wings assisting the motion.

“We're your creations,” he answered her simply, cocking his head to the side as if the answer should have been obvious to her right from the very beginning. “And, as you've brought us to life, we're going to help you.”

She blinked dumbly at them, a reckless giggle burbling up from her throat.

“Help me?” She cackled, shaking her head like a woman gone mad. “What on earth are you going to do to help me? I’ve already clearly gone quite round the bend! Shouldn’t we just not make that any worse?”

The crimson dragon huffed a plume of smoke and nuzzled her cheek, breath hot on her pale skin. Against herself, Hayley shivered and pressed the flat of her palm to his cheek. If she was crazy, she may as well enjoy it, she reasoned with herself. And the dragon was warm. And comfortable. She could almost fall asleep in the tucked up nook of his body.

“You’ve been wanting something, Hayley, something you’ve denied yourself of for far, far too long.”

His tongue snaked out to lick up her neck, tickling and teasing in equal amounts. Biting her lip, Hayley swallowed a groan, eyes flitting to the blank canvas that should have boasted a dragon and gryphon. But her mind was clearly playing tricks on her. The canvas must really have held a dragon and a gryphon and she’d just fallen asleep – or something else reasonable like that. She stared the dragon down, narrowing her eyes.

“I’ve not been stopping myself from doing anything,” she said, growing firmer in her resolve that the beasts were nothing more than a figment of her imagination, no matter how solid they seemed to be. “And you should know that if you’re coming out of my head spouting off that kind of lie!”

Huffing, she sat up straight, away from the warm hide of the dragon, and folded her arms across her head.

“Just what, exactly, do you think I’ve been denying myself of then, hm? Come on, out with it! This must be good.”

By way of reply, the dragon nuzzled into her neck, his warm breath washing under her t-shirt and curling about her bare breasts. Having been working from home, she had not bothered putting on a bra that day and the dragon found himself with easy access to her nipples. His tongue wrapped around one, saliva slickening his path, and he dragged the smooth appendage up her chest, letting the tip flicker out at the hollow at the base of her throat. Before she could stop herself, Hayley moaned and arched her back, that tentative touch enough to stoke a fire in the very fibre of her being that she had not even known had existed.

The dragon smirked, nose buried in the crook of her neck as the gryphon pushed his way in, squawking indignantly.

“You said you wouldn’t start without me,” he chirped reproachfully, a paw on Hayley’s thigh. “Her release is just as important to me as it is to you.”

Nodding sagely as Hayley shivered in place, unable to move as her mind locked up, the dragon sighed.

“You are right, of course. Our creator deserves better than just the one of us.”

He eyed Hayley, the tip of his nose brushing her cheek. She lifted her hand as if automatically to run her hand down his neck, marvelling briefly at the warmth radiating through his scales from his inner fire.

“That is if our lovely creator will have us.”

Hayley blinked stupidly, her lower jaw falling slack.

“Have you...how? What on earth do you mean?”

The dragon shook his head, pulling back with an incredulous look in her eye – or as incredulous a look as a dragon could give.

“Must we show you? I am sure you will enjoy the pleasures we have to give.”

“Pleasures?”

Her mind moved too slowly for the beasts who had come to show her what she’d been missing out on. The dragon’s side moved from her back and Hayley squeaked as she was laid down on the hard floorboards, suddenly staring up at her own ceiling. Chirping, the gryphon bounded in and butted his head into her shoulder, the tuft at the tip of his tail whisking playfully back and forth. Hayley splayed her hands out flat on the floor, but made no move to put herself back upright as the beasts took charge of her situation.

“What’s going on? What are you doing?”

The questions didn’t make much sense in the moment and Hayley laughed at herself, blinking up at the gryphon as the dragon nuzzled down her stomach. Her skin tingled at his touch and her heart rate was elevated before she could even take stock of what was happening. She licked her lips, rubbing the dragon’s snout and marvelling at his rough, warm scales. Could her imagination really be so vivid? With her resolve slipping away to retain her sanity, Hayley suddenly found that she didn’t care anymore. Her heart surged, lips parting in a breathy, open-mouthed smile. Why shouldn’t she enjoy herself? It was ridiculous that she’d denied herself all this time!

For she understood what the beasts were telling her at long last, the passion of artistry that she’d secluded away along with her most deeply buried inner desires. Her cheeks burned. When was the last time she’d pushed her hand between her thighs and given herself pleasure? She didn’t have a boyfriend, of course. She almost laughed aloud at herself. Of course she didn’t have time for a boyfriend, who did anymore? But that didn’t mean that her needs and desires had to fall by the wayside while she buried her head in work.

Perhaps she was lucky her twisted mind was intent on showing her that missed out on ecstasy one way or another. The dragon’s teeth ever so gently caught in her t-shirt and tugged, tearing through the fabric to expose her bare breasts. Expertly, he curled his tongue around a nipple, drawing her breast up between her lips as he sucked tenderly, flicking his slender tongue against that taut nub of pleasure until she arched and cried out wantonly. Each lap of his tongue and soft lips caressing her breasts stoked the fire inside her more and more, drawing her need out and out so that it could absolutely no longer be ignored.

But he had something else in mind for her before they moved on to the main event of their liaison. Treating her loose jogging bottoms – house trousers at their best – to the same treatment as her shirt, he pulled them loose from her body and shredded the remains with his claws. Her panties, plain and innocent, were easily discarded as she shimmied them down her legs in her way of assisting, fingers trembling so badly in nervous excitement that she almost couldn’t do it herself.

Chuffing softly, the dragon nuzzled her inner thighs tenderly, snaking his tongue up against her swiftly dampening sex, arousal getting the better of her all too quickly. The gryphon, on the other hand, strutted back and forth, bobbing his head as his tapered cock slid slowly from his sheath, boasting two bulges down the length. Hayley shivered, flicking her attention between the two of them as the dragon’s tongue burrowed between her pussy lips.

Moaning, she pushed up to his tongue, fingers scrabbling on the floorboards, and reached for the gryphon as he stood over her head. The beast chirped and flapped his wings, leonine tail swishing as he showed off the size and girth of his own shaft, evidently proud of every inch he had to offer her. Instinctually, she wrapped her hand around his length and pumped it slowly, over and over again, as he shuddered and chirped, hips rolling to thrust his shaft into her willing palm.

She just wondered exactly how it would feel inside her.

Rumbling softly against her sex, the dragon purred and flicked his tongue up and over her clit.

“How good was it to paint again, Hayley?” He purred, tongue driving back deep into her pussy. “How many times have you longed to sit before the easel and do just what you did today?”

Hayley moaned and rolled her head from shoulder to shoulder, cheeks heated.

“It... It doesn’t matter,” she panted, struggling to force the words out. “I couldn’t do it. Still can’t do it. I have to get work done.”

The dragon shook his head, his sharp eye radiating disapproval.

“That is not how it is to go now, Hayley. Let us show you where passion can lead you...”

Scooping her up as easily as if she was a dragonet, the dragon shuffled her onto the gryphon’s back and the duo carried her to the sofa. She squeaked, flailing as the gryphon’s silken hide failed to provide any grip, and landed with a soft grunt on the sofa, head bouncing back off the cushions. The gryphon’s eyes shone as he murmured his apologies, squeezing his beak between her thighs for his own taste of her sex. Hayley let her head roll back, slumping down onto the sofa, and moaned lustfully as he lavished attention on her clit, bringing her very nearly to a quick, sharp orgasm. But she needed more. She needed far more than just that one climax.

“Please...” She breathed, eyes hazy. “I need this. I need you. Please do as you will to me, just make this burning go away.”

Pulling back, the gryphon nuzzled her stomach reassuringly and allowed the dragon into his space, the beast’s cock hanging hard beneath his scaled barrel-belly. Stepping over her, the dragon flexed his muscles, slapping his cock, which was ridged along the length right down to the tip, up against his stomach. She stared, transfixed, and unconsciously licked her lips, a throaty moan rising from the back of her throat. The dragon nuzzled her neck softly, reassuring her with his touch.

“It’ll get worse before it can be released, Hayley, but I promise you will enjoy every moment of this, our dear creator.”

“You’ve done so much for us,” the gryphon whispered, teasing her breasts with the soft, rounded side of his beak. “It’s time for us to show you the way now.”

The dragon seemed to know exactly what to do and how to position his body, the head of his cock pressing easily up to her pussy lips. Slick enough that he could grind back and forth through the soft flesh, the beast growled and enjoyed the feel of her body for a moment before lining himself up properly. And when the head of his shaft spread her open for the first time in far too long, Hayley arched up to meet his slow, easy penetration.

He pushed in deep as the gryphon perched on the back of the sofa above her and she struggled to concentrate, encouraging him down with clicks of her tongue against the roof of her mouth. He hopped onto the arm of the sofa, tail flicking, and she thrust her torso up as much as she could from the sofa, running her tongue up the length of his shaft. He trembled and chirped, finally understanding what she wanted as the dragon thrust, taking her in slow, loving strokes. He adjusted himself over her, pushing his body between her and the dragon’s large chest to rub the head of his cock questioningly over her lips. And Hayley was only too ready to accept him.

As the gryphon’s cock eased between her lips and the dragon plundered her needy cunny, Hayley’s eyes rolled into the back of her head, every nerve ending in her body searing with red-hot fire. Had sex always been so good? No – it couldn’t possibly have been! She would have done it all the time if it had actually felt so fantastic! She moaned around the gryphon’s shaft, suckling softly at his tip, and pushed her hips up from the sofa as the dragon took her.

Every thrust brought with it a fresh wave of pleasure and stars danced behind Hayley’s closed eyes. His massive shaft bottomed out against her inner barrier and he quickly learned how deep he could thrust, a good few inches of his cock left outside her cunny – but depth would come in time, she was sure. She would have many more times with her gryphon and dragon lovers as her body learned to accept their tools. The cock in her mouth pressed over her tongue, drooling pre-cum, and she gulped down every drop eagerly, whimpering as her lovers drew a cord inside her tauter and tauter. She twisted back and forth as the dragon's thrusts picked up, pounding her, and groaned around the gryphon's shaft, pressing up to the back of her throat.

So close... She tried to roll her head, but couldn't with a cock stretching her lips lewdly wide. Above her, the dragon hissed, smoke roiling from his nostrils, and slammed into her, driving her shoulders back into the sofa. With any other lover, she may have complained, but with each and every thrust pushing her to greater heights of pleasure, she did not have the heart to. She gulped and swallowed around the gryphon's cock as he pushed deeper, his claws tearing at the sofa. There was only so much a male could take, after all.

But it was Hayley who could not take the pleasure that her lovers were only too keen to deliver. She panted heavily, sucking in breath after breath that never seemed to be quite enough through her nostrils, eyes wide. Part of her wanted to hold back, afraid of allowing herself the release that had been so denied for so long, but her lovers weren't about to let her do that, slamming into both holes with needy jabs.

Her moan was cut off by a muffled squeal of utter delight as orgasm claimed her, whipping her up on an updraft to soar the skies and plummet on the edge of adrenaline. As the dragon drove in with increasingly urgency, sides heaving, her pussy twitched and clenched all down the length of his magnificent shaft, urging him on to spend himself inside her as she knew he could. The gryphon cawed and pumped her throat, trusting her to take him deep as he drooled a steady stream of pre-cum down her throat, each thrust a little more erratic than the last. But Hayley didn't care about how coarse and rough they were with her – not with ecstasy flowing through her veins like water.

The dragon hit his climax without warning, suddenly jamming in every bit of his cock that he could and letting loose a roar that shook dust from her bookshelves. She shouldn't have been able to feel him shooting his load inside her, yet every rope of hot cum flooding her passage prolonged her orgasm a little more. It oozed out around his shaft, trickling down over her buttocks as he pumped her fuller and fuller, the gryphon humping and bucking urgently into her mouth as if he didn't want to be left out.

As the dragon heaved for breath, eyes glazed over with pleasure, the gryphon keened and flapped his wings, reaching his own high the last out of the three of them. Hayley's eyes bulged and she gulped rapidly, though was nowhere near swift enough to swallow every drop of his cum. It spurted out the corners of her lips as he thrust, drooling down over her chin and making a mess of her neck and chest, far more productive than any human male would have been. Hand trembling, she stroked his feathered chest softly, cupping his furred balls as they trembled in her hold, emptying the final spurts straight down her throat.

The three lovers, artist and creations, panted in the afterglow, the dragon nuzzling her chest tiredly as he slipped from the sofa to the floor, cock easing from her pussy. He stretched out his head to her as if he didn't really want to go, yet exhaustion claimed him all the same. As he crooned to her and curled up into a softly heaving ball of scales – her poor sofa bent and dented in his wake – the gryphon bounded into his spot, softening cock bouncing. He pushed his head between her thighs to slurp up the cocktail of her juices and dragon cum before nuzzling her stomach, a sheen of cum marking his beak. But his eyelids drooped all the same, opening and closing every couple of seconds as if he simply could not stay awake for a moment longer.

Smiling to him, Hayley blew him a kiss and encouraged him to the floor to join his sleepy partner. Men were all the same really, but, for once, she didn't mind that her lovers craved sleep after satisfying her. He churred softly and flopped to the floor beside the dragon, tail outstretched and forepaws flung out before his body, falling asleep so quickly that he didn't even have time to curl up.

As the dragon and gryphon slumbered in a pile of scales, feathers and fur, Hayley clambered awkwardly to her feet and stared at the previously blank easel. Where there had been no background, the image of her own living room had appeared, although noticeably devoid of fantastical creatures. The spots where their bodies should have been were oddly blurred as if her brush strokes had been smeared with her own tears.

Hayley shook her head sadly at the finished yet unfinished painting. Regardless of what had happened in the past, it had served its purpose to her and she had to respect that. She was fortunate that her creations had cared enough about her to show her the right way. Even though she stood on shaky legs that still did not quite want to support her weight, her heart beat patiently and soundly, finally at peace after their interlude from reality and thrill of ecstasy.

Putting the painted canvas to the side, she smiled to her creations, sleeping as soundly as cats, and placed a fresh canvas on the easel, rolling a brush between her thumb and forefinger. The late afternoon sun glinting through the window and she made a mental note to give it a good clean the next day. It would be nice to have some more natural life to brighten her apartment.

And then she let her passions loose.