

Draconian Enrichment Their Bound Toy

Alis Mitsy

“Here are the forms for you! Just have a read through and we'll be good to go!”

Cecilia frowned and twiddled a strand of blonde hair, straightened to perfection, between her thumb and first finger. The skin on the remainder of the digits on both hands had been picked at and scraped raw around the nails and cuticles. Only that one finger and thumb was untouched, a semblance of the finery her hands could have had if only she didn't maul them so.

She sighed, supposing that she'd expected something, well, a little something more from signing up to the dragon enrichment programme, even if she was only acting as a volunteer. Surprisingly, the programme was always advertising for volunteers – a fact that Cecilia simply could not understand. Yet it seemed to be the case that not many at all wanted to interact with the beasts, choosing the comparative safety of their homes over getting up close and personal. That was for other people to do, not for them. Let others get the dirty work done while they put their feet up in old, worn slippers and had another cuppa in front of the television, marvelling at rare footage of the beasts in the wild.

Not many were as devoted and proactive as Cecilia. She wasn't like that and could never be like that either. Her plump lips pressed together into a hard line. No, she'd never been one to stand on the side-lines when animals needed her help. Ever the activist, she'd made her mark in school and then college, fundraising for animals – whether endangered or in her own little suburb of home - and taking in more homeless small creatures than anyone could've counted. Even a fox had lived in her garage for a time, recovering from a vicious attack of poisoning. She hadn't thought that he would make it, but all the sleepless nights had been worth it when Tod had streaked into the night, full of life that he'd almost lost.

Jerking back to reality, Cecilia shot the volunteer receptionist in the dragon visitor centre a sheepish look. Her cheeks warmed with colour.

“Sorry, lost myself a little there. Where do I need to sign again?”

The brunette on the other side of the desk pushed her glasses back up her nose. The wall behind her was plastered with photographs of the zoo's dragons, some images curling at the corners from age alone.

“You really should have a read through the paperwork first,” she said, pushing the sheets a little closer to Cecilia. “There's a lot of...useful information in there. And things you can opt out of as you want. You don't have to do anything you don't want to do here, trust me. No one's forced into anything.”

Cecilia giggled and half-shrugged.

“Well, there's nothing I wouldn't do for an animal in need, so don't you worry about that! I'm no stranger to cleaning up all manner of unmentionables at any time of day or night.”

The young woman snorted, winking at the receptionist who scooted her chair back a couple of inches, her eyes unduly wary. Oblivious, Cecilia blundered on, as headstrong as ever.

“Been there, done that, got the t-shirt – am I right?”

Unknowing of the other volunteer's discomfort and screwed up face, Cecilia signed and dated the last page of the pack of paperwork with a flourish. With a grin that stretched from ear to ear, she held out the paperwork all as one bundle.

“Sorted! Now, where the poop-scoop for my first job?”

The receptionist sighed. At least the dragons would be happy with their over-enthusiastic new volunteer.

*

Holding her breath, Cecilia held out her hand to the dragon, eyes respectfully lowered. In the small holding pen, there was little distance between them across the concrete, although the dragon with striking emerald scales could escape at any time through a gate back into his main enclosure; the keeper had not wanted him to feel trapped at all.

The beast stretched out his head, snuffling distrustfully with his narrow muzzle at her hand. Her chipped nail polish had been cleaned off before entering the holding pen, but it seemed that some of the acetone was left on her hands, leaving them smelling strongly of chemicals. The size of a moderately sized pony, he loomed over her as she crouched and yet still instinctively saw her as a threat. Snorting, he eyed her hand as if she was about to shoot it out and strike him. Johnnie, the keeper in charge of the European Green dragons, amongst others, clicked his tongue encouragingly against the roof of his mouth, standing off to the side.

“Easy now,” he said with a smile. “Just stay real nice and still, like, and he'll come to you. He's a brave one, our lad there Fang.”

“Is that why he's called ‘Fang’?” She asked, never once taking her eyes off the dragon, although she was careful not to look him in the eyes. “He doesn't look very...toothy.”

The keeper chuckled and shook his head, adjusting his baseball hat a curl of black hair poked out over his ear.

“Nah, just a good name for him. He likes it, don't you, Fang?”

The green dragon bobbed his head and churred softly as if to agree and then snaked his neck out and pressed his nose into the palm of Cecilia's hand. She inhaled sharply, frozen in place as the beast accepted her touch. Fang sniffed her palm, eyes wide as if he was surprised at his own actions, and then remembered himself, pushing his tongue between her fingers as he licked her.

“Hey, that tickles!”

She giggles, wriggling her fingers over his snout. Ducking his head playfully, the dragon bowed on his forelegs, rump wriggling as he gave a surprisingly canine bark, eyes bright and shining.

“You’re a natural at this!” Johnnie congratulated, clapping her lightly on the shoulder. “Look, he’s already trying to play with you. He doesn’t accept just anyone that close to him. He’d usually run away.”

Johnnie chuckled, watching how the dragon crooned and rubbed his face against her shoulder, horns catching lightly on her jacket.

“In fact, I’d say he’s quite taken with you.”

Straightening, Cecilia rubbed the flat of the dragon’s face, between his eyes, and blew him a kiss. Eyes half-lidded, Fang leaned into her touch and vibrated with a series of gentle purrs that would have sounded more appropriate coming from a lion.

“So, what did you want to get out of your time here?”

Fang backed off, apparently losing interest now that it appeared that Cecilia didn’t have any food on her. It was strange to her that he had willingly approached even without a little bit of encouragement, but she put it down to the creature simply being well used to being handled and having human beings around. Her brow furrowed sympathetically. He probably had to deal with screaming children gawking at him through the plexi-glass of the viewing area all day long.

Cecilia sighed and pushed her hands into her pockets.

“I just want to do my bit really. That woman tried to get me to opt out of things, but I didn’t. Do people really only want to do the fun stuff around here?” She shook her head. “I was expecting to be handed a shovel as soon as I came in, but you’ve been really nice to me so far. What gives?”

Johnnie stared at her, ignoring her questions.

“Really...” He raised an eyebrow. “You didn’t opt out of anything at all on the forms?”

Cecilia shook her head proudly.

“Nope!”

He scratched his nose, peering at her obviously out of the corner of his eye as if he was trying and failing to be subtle. Cecilia’s face darkened in a scowl that she wiped away a moment after it appeared.

“You know that’s still not binding, right? You still have a choice in what you do here.”

She stared him down, forehead furrowing as she gave him her most serious look. What did she think she was, some little girl that didn’t want to do real work?

“I am deadly serious here. There is nothing I will not do for an animal and I’m here to prove that.”

Johnnie shook his head and pushed his cap up from his forehead, wiping away a trickle of sweat.

“There’s only a handful that go that far...” He looked her up and down, eyes raking her body as if in a new light. “That’s really admirable of you. It’s something we desperately need around here, more people like you. And we haven’t had someone willing to help the dragons out so much in a very long time.”

Despite her best efforts to contain herself, Cecilia’s chest puffed up with pride.

“Really?” She waved her hand dismissively, cheeks pink. “It was nothing. Really

“So, Dana explained all of this to you, right? What we’re trying to do for our draconian enrichment programme?”

Cecilia gulped, but tried not to let her momentary lapse in self-confidence. So what if they hadn’t discussed every little detail of the programme? Wasn’t she there to learn anyway? That was the whole point of it. And to look after the dragons. But she wouldn’t be able to do her best for them if she did not learn. As she smiled genuinely, her head buzzed with a million and one questions.

“Of course she did.” Her heart pounded. “Are we going to get started? I’ll do anything and everything, even what those other volunteers didn’t want to do.”

Johnnie smirked.

“Why so coy about it? I’ve done some too, though only used my hand with them.”

Cecilia blinked.

“You what?”

Chuckling, the young man waved his hand and beckoned her on and out of the holding pen. She followed him, trying not to let her confusion show as they stepped into the barn where the dragons slept, tucked away from the weather. European Green dragons were not as resilient as their nocturnal and larger brethren, preferring fine weather and a fair wind to lift their wings. The scent of straw mingled with dragon musk wrapped around Cecilia like a warm blanket as she inhaled deeply.

But Johnnie was moving on, making his way to an enclosure at the very end of the aromatic barn, set in a glow of wood that had surely been painted to ensure it was fireproof. Cecilia couldn’t see any other way to keep the dragons enclosed in the barn otherwise!

“What do you mean you’ve used your hand with the dragons?” She strove to sound confident, despite not knowing what he was talking about. “Is that all you’ve done? What else have you done then?”

His laugh rolled over her, doing a better job of making her feel like a clueless little girl than his words ever could. Johnnie's years of experience as a zoo keeper to the dragons dwarfed her little urge to help wherever she could. Cecilia steeled herself, folding her arms across her chest as he steamrolled on.

"You sign up for something like that and you're acting like you're so sweet and innocent..." He licked his lips, turning away from her and busying himself with the latch on one of the stalls as if to hide something from her. "Maybe you really do just want to help, but anyone who wants to put out like that has an ulterior motive. They like it."

"Well..." Cecilia hesitated, rolling the words around her mouth as she tried to go with a flow she didn't understand. "I like helping. That's all there is to it really."

Johnnie's shoulders shook with barely suppressed laughter, but before she could shoot a smart remark his way, he beckoned her into the stall. Her lips parted, words balanced on the tip of her tongue, and then she stopped dead in her tracks, letting Johnnie close the door securely at her heels.

She didn't know what to expect on entering, but a wooden frame of a dragon was not the first thing she could have thought of. A crude design, it was clearly not a dragon even at a first glance, one side open to show the frame that gave it shape. Curiously, she tapped its rounded hindquarters, finding them covered with a flap of leather that fell down over the side of the model as if it could be tucked into the semblance of the shape of real dragon hide. It even had a tail, curled up over its back as if the model was about to launch into play.

Putting his hands on his hips, Johnnie grinned widely as if vastly proud of himself. She scowled and jerked her head towards the model dragon, patience finally waning.

"What is this?"

He patted the head of the faux dragon as if it was real.

"This, here, is what we use to help our volunteers help our dragons."

She blinked.

"I don't understand."

Johnnie sighed and ran his fingers through his hair, replacing the cap on his head afterwards.

"Well, did you think you were going to get down on all fours and Fang was just going to jump up on your back or something?"

"Why would he... Oh."

Cecilia gulped. Perhaps she should have read that paperwork after all. A chill ran through her from head to toe as if she'd been doused in a bucket of icy water in the dragon wash rack.

“What exactly was in that paperwork?” She asked, stalling for time as she did anything possible to not look at the faux dragon, which had suddenly taken on an entirely different meaning. “I...didn’t look through it as closely as I should have.”

Johnnie started, head jerking up as if he’d been yanked by his hair. His curls were surely thick enough, but he wasn’t going to be a partner for Cecilia that night. She curled the fingers of one hand into a fist without letting him see how it trembled.

Could she do it? Would she do it? Cecilia swallowed. They were animals... Dragons, but still animals. They didn’t think – at least not like human beings did.

Johnnie surveyed her with a critical eye, the first flicker of doubt crossing his face.

“You do know what you’ll be asked to do with the dragons though...don’t you?”

“Yes!” She said quickly, too quickly. “I know exactly that, just wasn’t sure if there was something more I was missing. And I wasn’t expecting to be asked to do this quite so soon either.”

She frowned at him as if it was his fault personally that she’d been caught off guard, put forward as a toy for the dragons to use. It was the best defence she had at her disposal.

“You really should have given me time to settle in first. But...”

She took a deep breath, closing her eyes as she mulled her words over before letting them loose. There’d be no turning back if she said it aloud. She was insane for even considering it! She couldn’t lose face, not now. Who had she always been? She’d been the woman who’d do anything for an animal in need. And the dragons were clearly in need if they needed a breeding mount to relieve their urges. Everyone who knew anything about dragons knew about the urges of young males.

“But,” she continued slowly, forcing the words out as her head swam, “I’m prepared to do whatever is needed for the dragons here. Anything,” she added, putting due emphasis on the last word.”

Johnnie nodded, cowed by her outburst. There was little more he could say, but continue with his plans – the plans that every unknowing volunteer was treated to without exception. The drakes, after all, had not been allowed that kind of ‘fun’ in quite some time. And it had been too long for them. He cleared his throat, tugged at the collar of his shirt. Cecilia couldn’t help but notice the patches of sweat beneath his arms.

“So... You seemed to get on with Fang pretty well. Would you perhaps want to try with him? The little draggie just hasn’t had the attention he should have these days.” Johnnie rolled his eyes. “Anyone willing to help in that way just goes for the bigger breeds.”

Johnnie coughed into his hand and scuffed the toe of his shoe across the floor, bravado quickly waning when it came down to the moment of truth. Cecilia thought of Fang and how the little green dragon had so gently pushed his snout into her paw. If she was completely honest with herself, the thought of assisting the dragon in such an intimate manner brought an unwelcome rise to her heart, its beat fluttering like a bird’s wings.

Those glistening scales, taut muscles rippling beneath... She took a breath. They were quite stunning beasts and she'd caught herself looking at them in the zoos and wildlife parks with more than a little longing more than once. She would, however, never have admitted that aloud to anyone. Not even herself.

"They won't...um...penetrate me, will they?" Cecilia flushed. "That would be too much today. And wrong. That can't happen."

Johnnie shook his head.

"A warm body will do the trick. They like to think that they're mounting something alive. But you can do other things for them too, if you want." He blushed, almost cutely. "When you're more comfortable with them, that is."

He smiled, warmth flickering across his face.

"Do you want to get in?" He inclined his head towards the faux dragon, the breeding mount. "If you get a feel for it, maybe you'll want to do more next time."

She eyed it suspiciously.

"I'm not sure I buy that about them not penetrating me," she confessed, lips pressed together. "That looks like exactly what it's designed for."

Johnnie took a step back, hands up as he protested his innocence.

"I swear, it's nothing like that. Just try it – see how you feel. The dragons just mount and slide over the model, it's kinda neat actually. And gives them what they need."

He pointed at the faux dragon's hindquarters.

"Look, there's not even a hole there... If you don't mind me pointing out the obvious."

She peered at it more closely.

"There doesn't seem to be much point to it then." She shook her head. "Why have a breeding mount that a dragon can't...well..."

She made a gesture with her hand, flushing. Johnnie scratched the back of her neck and gave her a strange look.

"Trust me, they're strange creatures. They know if it's just an inanimate object they're on top of and something about a living being in there just does the trick for them. We need to collect semen for the programme and this is the only way they seem happy to do it, even if they're just fucking a 'sleeve' really."

He shrugged, holding up his hands.

"If you don't want to do it, you don't have to."

Cecilia gulped.

“What...right now?”

“Why not?” Johnnie held back the leather flap, which would undoubtedly be buckled around the frame once a person was secured inside. “Fang took a liking to you. I’ve never seen him act that way around anyone before. If you can do this for the dragons, you have no idea how much help it would be.”

She flinched. There was only one answer she could give to that and it made her stomach churn in all sorts of unwilling ways.

“How do I get in?”

Johnnie moved his hands as if to demonstrate how she should get into the model dragon. She sighed and rolled her shoulders, not understanding him in the slightest and taking matters into her own hands more for the sake of something to do than from any real motivation to get into the willing bondage. It was awkward to half-crouch and sidestep into, a warm darkness enclosing her as she took a deep breath and steeled herself for what was to come.

She just had to remind herself that it was for the dragons. She was doing it to help them.

Grunting, she wedged herself in, finding her arms slipping easily into the tunnel-like forelegs of the draconian mount, shoulders cushioned by rolled up wads of leather so that they did not dig into the frame too much as she rested face-down. Her backside embarrassingly filled out the hindquarters of the dragon, which was smaller than the one she’d already met, while her back ran through the centre of the frame without brushing the top at all.

Squirming, Cecilia tried to make herself a bit more comfortable, tipping to the side at an alarming angle.

“So, how does this work, exactly? I feel like I’m going to slip out here at any moment.”

“Hang on, I’ll strap you in.”

Johnnie moved too quickly for her to even think about protesting, securing the straps around her torso, legs and arms so that she could no longer tip half-out of the contraption. She wriggled, testing how well they held. Well, she couldn’t say that she no longer thought she was secure, that much was fair. Enclosed by the faux dragon, she almost felt serenely tucked away from the troubles of a modern world. Closing her eyes, Cecilia breathed slowly and deeply, relaxing into the warming touch of leather and imitation dragon-hide. The whole device stank to the beams of dragon, soothing her mind with an intoxicating elixir that could not have been replicated even if the most daring perfume companies had tried.

She smiled to herself. Maybe it wouldn’t be so bad to sit inside the contraption if she could help the dragons. It was comfortable enough, was it not?

The young man’s voice, when it came again, was muffled by the fabric.

“You ready for a trial run then?”

Ceciila tensed, all positive thoughts racing from her mind as she choked on a globule of her own spit.

“What?” She coughed, eyes bulging, striving to regain control of her own breathing. “What do you mean?”

“Great!”

Cecilia’s froze, even though she was not able to move anyway. He’d clearly misheard her! What was going on? She twisted and shook within her bonds, yet there was nothing she could do to draw his attention as a door outside creaked dully, heavy footsteps clumping one after the other in quick succession. And they only grew louder by the second – louder than her hammering heart.

“Here he comes,” Johnnie called, evidently back from behind the door, voice fading. “I’m gonna get out of the way so he doesn’t think I’m competition. Good luck!”

She twisted her head around sharply, but all she saw was the dark inside of the model, which, now that she thought about it, really shouldn’t have fooled any dragon to begin with.

“Johnnie? Wait, you can’t just leave me here! Come back! I don’t want to do this now! I’ll do it later – just not now, I promise! Come back!”

But he was already gone, footsteps receding as his voice had. Cecilia twisted her head back and forth, eyes wide and staring around an interior that was becoming all too familiar to her as she raked her gaze over what she could see again and again. The same wooden posts pressed into her shoulders and hips, holding her in place as the straps cradled her, assuring Cecilia that escape was not to be had any time soon.

And she was alone in the stable with the dragon.

She held her breath. Maybe if she was quiet, the beast wouldn’t realise she was in there? Her heart pounded. Of course, it was a futile thought as untrimmed claws tapped over the concrete, their approach muted by the leathery flaps hanging heavy around her body. How close was he? She wetted her lips with the tip of her tongue, willing her blood to stop hammering against the inside of her eardrums in an insistent pulse. She could imagine him stalking her, the breeding dragoness, muscle rippling beneath a hide that was designed to kill. The dragons were all power, despite their size, and a creature that had learned to survive on their wits alone.

Swallowing a groan that she couldn’t explain, Cecilia forced the thoughts of the dragon from her mind, focusing only on what was happening in the moment. She couldn’t think of how alluring the beasts were – not now. That was wrong. Better to think of her annoying her bondage was and how much trouble she was going to get that vile person Johnnie into when he reappeared at last. Taking a deep breath, she steadied herself, fingers curling into fists. Only one traitorous thought crept in, snaking tendrils up to the forefront of her mind.

It couldn’t be that bad to be mounted by a dragon...surely?

The dragon in question – Fang – snorted hotly across her backside and Cecilia squeaked, shaking. Even through the material, she could feel how warm the dragon ran, snout moving down her side as he inspected her from every angle imaginable. Twisting and turning as Fang circled her, once, twice and then a third time, she strove to keep track of him, sweating through the pretty but practical shirt she'd put on that morning. Perhaps lingerie would have been more appropriate considering what she was just about to do for a dragon.

Maybe he wouldn't know to mount her. Maybe he would see through the pathetic ruse and give up. Cecilia listened intently, the stable around her abruptly quiet with only Fang's quiet breathing to keep her company. She swore he'd be able to hear her blood rushing through her veins as her heart worked too hard.

The dragon snuffled at the midsection of the mount, below where her stomach was cradled, and she sucked in a breath as what she presumed was its tail snaked out like a bullwhip, cracking across the hindquarters of what it assumed was a strange kind of dragon. Only just in time did she swallow her squeal, eyes watering from the sudden stinging slap.

Oh, get on with it, would you! She thought, lips pressing together into a thin, hard line. If this is how today is going to pan out, do what you will and then Johnnie can come back and I can get on with doing some real blooming good in this place.

She swore the dragon laughed at her, chuffing low in the back of his throat.

Cecilia gasped! Fang certainly didn't waste any time! But what did he see in the barn but a female presenting herself to him, tail raised over her back, in need of a good, hard breeding?

For a moment, Cecilia wished she was a dragoness herself, rocking back into the dragon as he crooned, nuzzling at the spot where the dragoness' shoulders would have been and making the faux hide dip in against her. She bit her lip, taking solace from the sliver of pain and crimson blood that she was not dreaming and she was finding herself wanting a dragon. Cecilia moaned properly this time, letting the sound escape her in a breathy gasp. Above her, Fang chirped, forelegs sliding around the fake dragon's hind legs to tuck himself in closer and closer.

She huffed, squirming in the claustrophobic confines. She didn't want to be in there anymore – not when Fang's shaft was sliding over the rump of the model. Groaning, Cecilia tried and failed to arch back, making herself as presentable a breeding female as she could in the moment, yet Fang could not see her and did not even know that she was there and wanted him. His claws pricked through the leather, scraping lightly against her thighs in the closest spark of sensation she would get from the dragon in such a one-sided breeding session.

Or...would she?

As the dragon thrust, rocking against the mount with such vigour that he pushed it up onto two legs, the fabric covering the mount's backside pushed in, more and more with every thrust. The woman moaned and ducked her head down, forehead beading with sweat as she imagined the dragon driving into her instead of finding meagre satisfaction on the hide of a mount that did not even wrap his cock in feminine warmth.

But the breeding mount was old and had held up to rough usage for too many years. The fabric bowed in dramatically and Fang snarled, the sound curling up from the back of his throat like a flame.

Cecilia shrieked as it gave with an almighty rip, the heated rod of dragon-flesh grinding up suddenly against her very own backside! Hot pre-cum soaked quickly through her trousers – thin and chosen for comfort, not durability – and Fang hissed excitedly, scrabbling against her sides as if for better purchase. He snapped at her neck, cock slathering her crotch in slick juices, and she flinched from the sound, heart hammering.

Well, she was getting what she wanted, wasn't she? Cecilia clenched her teeth, heat prickling across her skin as Fang ground his shaft between her legs, ever so slightly spread by the straps. She shuddered. It was better than hearing and feeling him mount the breeding stand, at least, although she would have to put on a show of anger when Johnnie came back, that much was sure. Cecilia laughed breathlessly, holding her breath as the very tip of Fang's cock ground up to her pussy lips, nuzzling along their soft groove, her own arousal seeping through. It was hard to think of what she'd have to say to the keeper, but she could put that off until later. Her mirth bubbled up from her lips, eyes bright and shining in the darkness. She couldn't have him thinking she wanted the dragon to fuck her – of course not!

But the dragon was determined – more determined than he had been in any previous breeding session. He'd had his first lick of a warm, willing body, cock grinding over a shivering rump, and wanted more.

Fang growled and snapped again, teeth clicking together sharply as his tail whistled through the air. Cecilia could only presume it was swinging back and forth as the dragon half-clambered up on the dragon, claws tearing through the hide in great, gaping swathes. The woman flinched and gasped, suddenly all too aware of her predicament as the dragon's cock bore down on her barely protected pussy, pushing in the fabric covering her snatch much the same as he had torn through the old, worn leather of the breeding mount. A chill ran down her spine, fingers stretching and clenching again reflexively as if to bring more blood to her extremities.

Her clothes weren't designed to withstand the lust of a horny dragon and it seemed that Fang knew it too. Crowing like a younger beast with his favourite toy, the dragon hunched further over her, gripping the stand for dear life as he jabbed and bucked his hindquarters. Cecilia howled, the tapered tip of his cock scraping roughly over her pussy and bringing a flare of undesirable sensation where her soaked trousers and panties clung to the outline of her lips.

It would be okay, she tried to reason with herself as the dragon snarled, more persistent by the second. He couldn't penetrate her. There was no way he should have been able to do it. Yet the dragon's cock pressed through her trousers and underwear, fabric tearing around his shaft, and found her entrance.

Cecilia tried to shriek, yet found no breath left in her lungs with which to scream, to call Johnnie back. Fang gave a long, rolling hiss as he bore in, the sound of his small wings fluttering above her as his tail smacked the floor sharply. She twisted her head back and forth, unable to do anything but lie there helplessly as the dragon took her, cock pushing deeper and deeper until he could secure not a bit more within her dripping cunt.

She flushed, cheeks warming with heat. When had she become so wet? Why was a dragon turning her on so much? It was wrong, oh so very wrong, and yet so very right at the same time. He didn't stretch her out too much – just the right amount – but grew thicker at the base, his slick, almost slimy, shaft pounding her depths like no man ever could.

Cecilia moaned, not caring if anyone was there to hear her, as Fang slammed into her, a dragon intent on taking his fill of her whether she wanted him to or not. But she wanted it – oh so wanted it so much! He grunted like the wild animal he was as he drove into her, claws latching onto her thigh as the breeding stand served to do little more than to keep him a safe distance from her, just so he couldn't thrust his entire length into her dripping cunny. She yelped at the prick of pain, but it was quickly overcome by rising pleasure, the power of the beast fucking her driving her on and on to what felt to be a searing yet explosive high.

Could she climax so swiftly? Her mind reeled, swamped with sensation after sensation that threatened to overrule her better sensibilities entirely. She howled, arching her back as much as she was able as the straps rubbed into her skin, coarse through the fragile barrier of what clothing she was left with. But nothing she did would have been able to stop her oncoming orgasm, gripping her in a dragon's claw and yanking her from the bounds of land as she flew.

She moaned and babbled incoherently, praise for the mighty beast slipping from her lips like water, one word blending into the next. But it didn't matter what she was actually saying – Fang liked it well enough and he liked the warmth of her young body even more. As her passage squeezed and massaged his throbbing length, the dragon whipped his tail through the air and drove in deeper and harder, a low roar build in his gut. And, when he unleashed it, the tremors of his climax rippled through Cecilia, making her orgasm one with that of the dragon's.

Although he had no balls held externally to tug up closer to his body, Cecilia groaned at every throb of cum that shot down his shaft, easy to feel as it pulsed down the tube that must have run up the underside of his cock. The tip wedged into her cervix, delivering thick spurts of seed right up into the deepest point of her passage and, although it was impossible, she imagined that she could feel each and every hot splash mingling with her juices in a delicious cocktail.

She could not have later told anyone just how long the dragon stayed inside her, cock dribbling the last remnants of his climax as he nuzzled and lipped the back of the stand like a common stallion standing at stud with a mare. Murmuring sweet words to him, Cecilia languished in her afterglow, only grumbling a little when the dragon dismounted. Clearly done with her, at least for the moment, he chirped and scampered off, claws tip-tip-tapping across the concrete. If she hadn't been leaking his cum like a needy slut, she would have found him adorable. But she was far too drained to think of humour, let alone keeping her eyes open and mind alert.

Cecilia was too far gone in a haze of wanton lust and afterglow to hear the keeper's footsteps approaching once again.

“Oh, shit!”

The cover yanked back, allowing the dim, flickering overhead strip lighting of the barn to illuminate the cum-covered young woman, backside bare and gleaming to the world. Or at least to Johnnie.

Johnnie gulped, crouching down to her level with a strange sort of terror in his eyes. He pushed up the flap and set to work on the straps keeping her contained. Cecilia looked down at the floor, cum drooling from her pussy as it gaped, the ruined tatters of her trousers useless across her mostly bare buttocks and thighs.

“I...” He shook his head, hands trembling so badly that he struggled to undo the straps. “Cecilia! I’m so sorry – that’s never happened before? Are you okay? Let me get you out... Did Fang hurt you? Fuck, I’m so gonna get fired for this one...”

Cecilia’s head lolled from side to side, blinking as she came back to herself, the young keeper rambling on and on, seemingly to himself. She lifted her head, licked her lips and locked her gaze with him, eyes so intense that he stopped in his tracks, fingers on a buckle that was only half undone. Her lips parted, breath sliding from her lips in an embrace far more intimate than that of a kiss.

“Which dragon takes me next?”