“Ruth... Ruth. What a pretty name.”

The wolf blushed and turned away, fanning her muzzle delicately with one paw as if to wave the heat from her face. Shaking his head, the shorter male leaned forward on the table, an elbow on the table cloth. He had not imagined her grey, delicate beauty would surpass that of the painting he had of her or the sound of her voice ring so pleasantly in his ears. She was a delight indeed. The male wolf smiled and straightened his tie so as to appear more presentable, fingers brushing over the mixture of orange, black and white fur perking over his collar. How could he ever compare to such divinity?

“Ruth.”

He savoured the name, rolling it around his mouth as if partaking in a delectable course of food, he so made a meal of the syllables.

“You have heard my name before,” she said, paws folded neatly in her lap.

“Yet never before from your lips, my dear.”

He raised his glass to her, sipping delicately from the liquor within. He was not sure, in hindsight, what he had expected upon meeting his long-distance lower. William had chosen the restaurant to impress – a true gentleman always paid for the lady – and seated her himself, drawing her chair back gently to allow her room at the round table with the smooth, creaseless tablecloth. Even sitting in the chair she appeared graceful, tucking in her grey wings to her back. They sprouted from between her shoulder blades, something that he had never imagined a mammalian anthro could possess. He had seen her but a few times before travelling to Romania to assist a family friend with property acquisition, a wolf bounding into his law career in true form with the American dream. If he worked hard, he could have anything he wanted and nothing was beyond his grasp. William sighed, remembering the moment of leaving with a sad twinge in his heart. He had never realised that he would miss Ruth so much. She had left her mark on him irrefutably.

So, they had maintained contact as 1914 became 1915, months rolling onward as irrevocably as the wind did blow. Thirteen months ago, to the day, she had sent him a little oil painting of herself – all she had been able to afford to show him her likeness. He had fallen in love the very moment he had cradled the square frame between his paws, lost in her sky-blue eyes and the sheen of her dark hair that fell halfway down her back.

He had been overjoyed when his family recalled him to Boston to assist in a family legal matter, as tedious as that was, as he could see his love again and see if her heart and affection lay in the realms of the living and not only in his dreams. It should not be long before his family would look to wed him to a suitable bride and why would Ruth, the stunning creature that she was, be anything but suitable?

“Ruth,” he said again, raising his glass to clink against hers gently. “I look forward to getting to know you in person. Face to face.”

The grey wolf tucked a strand of black hair behind her ear and smiled gently, though her eyes darkened with worry that she would not speak aloud. She sat up straight and crossed one leg demurely over the other, abruptly very conscious that she had not worn any undergarments beneath her otherwise modest dress. She preferred to go without.

Licking her lips, she lifted it to meet William’s, eyes upon the bubbles dancing within the lightly coloured liquor. She had no cause to worry, only anticipate; she could not say the same for him, however.

“We shall know each other intimately before the night is out, William.”

Ruth’s eyes narrowed as she stalked her prey.

Creeping along rooftops was a speciality of hers and she peered down into the quietening streets, thankful that any manner of night owls – the avian kind was particularly liable to wander and flap about after dark – were out of sight and out of mind for the time being. The grey wolf slunk across the peak of one building, carefully avoiding loose slates, every step taking her closer and closer to the wolf she so craved. Her heartbeat fluttered, skin warm to the touch, though it was an artificial warmth. She had cultivated it so that he would not be afraid of her cold skin beneath her fur when they did finally meet.

They had told her that the hunt would be thrilling but she had never believed them: not three hundred years ago, not two hundred years ago and certainly not one hundred years ago. Now, however? Her lust burned. Every nerve crackled with fire sparking over kindling, impossible to ignore. Moaning softly, she slipped a paw between her legs and rubbed her pussy, fingers exploring and teasing, nudging against the bud of her clit that she had become so familiar with over the years. She wore nothing beneath her dress and did not feel the chill of the night, breeze tickling her bare sex as she hiked up her dress. Modesty? What a jest! What was modesty to a creature that had lived for hundreds of years? Bodies were all the same. Yet she craved one body beneath her, muscles tensing in sexual euphoria, blood running over her tongue... She licked her lips, imagining that she could taste it already.

The first heat was always the worst but she had chosen her prey several months ago. The longer the hunt, the more pleasurable the feeding. Perched upon the rooftop, she crouched low and bared her teeth, fangs lengthening into vampiric fangs.

The hotel was set between two larger buildings, modest enough, considering William’s profession. She had expected him to choose a lavish establishment, but he had said he had become used to less in Romania. The state of the country and caring for the friend’s estate had given him a fresh perspective on Bostonian life, though she could not fathom why. Her life was to be enjoyed for years upon years. If she was to live so long, or even forever, she had to have a lavish abode. Her own home was pristine to a fault, decorated to reflect the times she had lived through. She had not been able to resist the crystal chandelier, however, loving the extravagance it conveyed. And Ruth was hardly short of money either.

She smirked, lips twitching up on the right side as she swung underneath the eave, scenting the air. Ruth hung in midair with only one paw supporting her wait, hind paws dangling into empty space. She trusted her strength. The thrill of the moment rushed through her in a lethal dose of adrenaline and she laughed aloud, reckless joy echoing through the streets, devoid of any and all life. A creature of the night, she could not be tamed and pushed the limits of her body further than any mortal could dream to.

Heartbeat fluttering in her chest – a mockery that she had concocted for the liaison – Ruth peered through the windows of the hotel that she hung over with narrowed eyes, squinting to see within. The curtains were drawn over most windows and she shimmied along until she found a crack in one, her sleeping love sprawled over the bed within.

She paused there for a moment, arm aching with muscles rarely exercised, and dropped carefully to the sill of the window, leaning into the hotel wall for support. Cool stone pressed to her chest, cold seeping through her dress. If anyone had wanted to break in through the window, they would have easily been able to, and it was with a roll of her eyes that Ruth pushed the window open and dropped inside, silent on her bare hind paws. Perhaps the hotel owner had not secured the window – for it would not latch from the inside – because it would take a most determined thief to break in to a second floor room from the exterior. For an otherworldly being, however, it was child's play.

Crouched on the floor of the neat bedroom, Ruth held still, not moving a muscle for fear that she had alerted William to her presence. The wolf grumbled in his sleep and rolled over on to his back, one arm flung across the opposite side of the double bed to where he slept. She shook her head. Used to a far narrower, more comfortable bed, Ruth could not imagine needing or wanting to take up so much space. She shifted, judging the depth of his sleep. The length of rope knotted around her waist bumped lightly against her thigh, reminding her of its presence.

The timing could not have been more ideal.

Leaping up on the bed like a cat, she pounced on to William and clapped a paw over his muzzle. He jerked into wakefulness as his limbs flailed wildly, eyes as wide as the saucers they had taken evening tea from after their meal at the restaurant.

“What are you doing?” He growled, anger flashing across his muzzle. “You can’t be here.

Ruth frowned. Why was he not happier to see her? Perhaps that was the way of it. Perhaps the males she chose would always fight, at first. Twisting beneath her, William brought one paw up as if to shove her away. She smacked his paw back down with a muted snarl, ears against her skull. How dare he?

“Quiet.”

Her voice came out in a hiss.

Closing her paw around his muzzle, she stifled his protests, using the weight of her body to pin his limbs to the bed, expert in her technique. He narrowed his eyes, anger flickering in his chest as she restrained him, expecting his male strength to win out, but she was too skilled for him. Ruth laughed. She had many more years of experience on him: he would not escape her. Mortals were weak.

He would not succumb. Arching up from the bed at a vicious angle, William threw his weight against her, nearly tipping the wolf off the bed. Her blood boiled. He was insane, the stupid, little mortal. Did he not see what a gift she was giving him? Did not all males want to fuck? She had had enough eyes on her to know her body was desirable? Did the fool not find her desirable? Baring her teeth, she wrapped her fingers around his wrists and slammed them back behind his head.

“Must I bind you?” She sighed, temper simmering: she had expected better from him, so much better. “I had hoped you would be willing, my love. Your heart pounded for me so deliciously. I could sense your pulse, so sweet a graze below your skin.”

His letters had been so sweet, she was sure she had cultivated him just right over the months. But she had been wrong. Unwinding the rope from her waist, she swiftly adjusted her grip on his wrists and knotted the rope about them skilfully, tightening it enough that she was confident that mortal fingers could not undo the restraint even if he was able to reach the knot at any point. Drawing the rope tight, she reached high as he squirmed beneath her, shocked by the speed with which she had him halfway incapacitated, entirely at her mercy. Yanking the rope through the gas lamp bracket set into the wall above the bed – conveniently placed for late night reading – she tied it off with a smirk, pulling his arms over his head at an aggressive, painful angle, coarse rope cutting in. William whimpered, cowed, and her resolve hardened. She did not care if it burned his wrists. He should have known better.

“Now you shall understand, my sweet William.”

With the wolf at her disposal, a strange sense of calm washed over her. It was time. She had no patience for the buttons on her dress, at the back where she could not twist to reach, and ripped through the fabric with a low growl. Her teeth and claws made quick work of the fine material, tearing it apart by seams and weave alike. William’s lips quirked in a frown, unduly annoyed by her spoiling such finery. She smiled, a wicked little laugh bubbling up in her throat. The wastage did not bother her: she had coin enough to buy more. Perhaps the male clung to his coin too fiercely.

William swallowed hard, traitorous eyes roaming her body, bare from head to toe. She only wore a small silver necklace clasped tightly around her throat, metal jumping with every pulse in her throat.

“Ruth...” He said lowly, pleading with his eyes. “This is not right. We are not married. I am not certain I even want to be married yet! We cannot do this.”

Halfway through the process of drawing the bed sheets from his still clothed body – that would have to be rectified and swiftly too – she paused, tilting her head to one side.

“Why not?”

He had her attention. Seizing his chance, he leaned forward earnestly, pulling at the ropes.

“I would never wish to sully your family name, Ruth,” he said. “You have stolen your way into my heart and I do not wish to bring you shame. We cannot lie together as male and female until we are married.”

Ruth snorted, throwing a paw in the air in derision.

“Until marriage?” She scoffed. “What a jest! And why should one such as I wait until marriage to have what I desire, what my body craves?”

William shook his head, flinching away as her paw landed on his chest, claws digging into his night clothes but not breaking his skin. Her eyes bored into his, intense in the light from the gas lamps outside, lining the street.

“I say we can.”

Sitting up, she ran her paws over her body, groping her breasts with a needy thrust of her hips. He watched her, suppressing a groan. The bulge rising through the sheets covering his crotch could not be so easily concealed, however. Ruth giggled, cupping her sizeable breasts – one to each paw.

“Look at me. You cannot pretend that your lust does not rise for me.

She ripped the sheets from his body with a fierce flourish, giving his inescapable bulge a squeeze. Lowering her muzzle to his neck, she nipped and kissed, careless of her sharp fangs, as she used her claws to slowly and sensually tear the night clothes from his body. Limb by limb, part by part, her love was revealed to her in all his glory, knotted canine cock standing up proud for her attention. He turned his head away, crimson beneath his fur. It had been a long while since he had been naked in front of a female and that last female had only been his nanny when he was but a cub.

Ruth bit her lip, drawing a bead of blood. Wonderingly, she trailed a paw down his body from his chest to his cock, wrapping it around the red length and giving it an experimental stroke. The fur between her thighs was soaked with her feminine moisture, body responding as it had been groomed to over the ages, and she whimpered softly, wriggling her hips. She needed him so badly but wanted relief herself!

Torn between her options, she crawled over William’s body in a flash decision, hips above his head, and turned to face down the length of his body. So positioned, she lowered her dripping sex to his lips, whining out her need as she stroked his length. He hesitated a moment and she wondered if she would have to force him but he was pretty to male need as much as heat rendered her desperate and quickly lapped over her pussy, tasting her. Licks becoming bolder with every lap, the male pushed up more eagerly, tongue swiping over the lips of her pussy and the tight pucker of her tail hole, making her arch and grind down.

She moaned, still using his full name in an oddly formal fashion. Each stroke of her paw brought a drool of pre cum from the tip of his cock, smearing over the shaft and her grey paw, length growing slick. Curious, she lifted her paw to her lips as he lapped at her pussy as if it was a sweet treat, tongue dipping out to scoop up a creamy white drop from the pad of her finger. She started at the salty taste, the musk from William's body stirring a greater base need in her.

He was hers and she had to have him. Now.

She dove on top of him, scrambling against the wolf in her haste. Positioning her hips over his cock, she grasped it in one paw, holding it upright as she tried to force the tip into her folds. She growled, frustrated when everything did not simple fit together as it should in her mind, pushing forward and ignoring his protests. It took a few attempts but, finally, the head pushed into her pussy, spreading her passage open for the first time.

Her lips parted and she moaned, tail wagging gently. The stretch hurt but in a pleasurable way and she sank down to where the knot would form, still in its deflated state. Every nerve ending was on fire, the simple act of rising and falling on William's shaft making her inner muscles contract in a way that she had not known was possible. Twisting beneath her, the wolf could not hide his enjoyment of the situation, caught in the spell that Ruth wove. His tongue lolled from his muzzle as he panted, rust-coloured fur matting with sweat under his arms and between his shoulder blades.

What had this temptress done to him? Sex before marriage was wrong! Yet it was so right to thrust inside her. Pushing his hips up from the bed, William groaned deep in his throat and planted his hind paws flat on the ruined bed sheets, using the leverage to spear up into his partner. She murred softly, pleased that he had come around – what male would not succumb to her charms? – and ran a paw tenderly down his chest.

"Oh, my William," she all but purred, locking eyes with her love. "You are all I have ever wanted and more."

Hips bucking as she rode him, the wolf arched forward, teeth flashing in a show of vampiric fangs. He barely had time to register what was happening before they sank into his neck, blood seeping from the wounds. Through the pain of the bite, sheer ecstasy flooded his senses, threatening to overcome him entirely. It seemed to wave away the hurt and his shock at being bitten, his love turning into a creature of myth and legend and nightmare before his very eyes, and he arched off the bed, back viciously bowed in an effort to contain himself and all she called from him. Eyes growing hazy, he gasped for breath and drove into the she-wolf with the frenzied strokes of a crazed fur, knowing nothing but lust as she drank his blood.

Rearing her head back, Ruth licked blood from her lips and pushed down on his swelling knot, forcing it into her tight snatch. It grew within her, locking the two together as William panted, blood running down his neck on to the pillows. Squirming, he pulled fruitlessly at the ropes, gas bracket creaking under the pressure. His own paw never felt this good but he could not be ready to cum so soon! Reaching between their bodies, Ruth rubbed her clit between a thumb and finger, driving herself to the edge of a whimpering, squirming peak. But only William's cum would satisfy her – nothing else would sate her heat and she would be left wanting.

She did not have to wait long, gyrating her hips shallowly as his knot swelled to its full size, throbbing inside her cunny as the rust-furred wolf fought his bonds, eyes closed as he rushed into climax. Thrusting up into the winged wolf one last time, William howled as he ejaculated, spilling ropes of seed into the fertile Ruth. She trembled, pleasure wracking her body as the unfelt splash of semen within her tight cunt soothed the heat, quelling and satisfying the need like a cup of water after going nearly to the point of passing out from dehydration. Her William was her cup of water, her goblet of wine, life blood trickling over his throat. Squeezing her clit more roughly than a lady may have enjoyed under normal circumstances, she bared her fangs and sank them into his neck once more, drinking his blood with a light moan as her own body convulsed in the twisted grip of orgasm.

Climax was always sweeter with blood on one's tongue.

She rested on top of him, withdrew her fangs from his neck and licked softly over the bitten spot, easing the bruise beneath the fur. His knot remained swollen in her cunt for some time, ensuring that she was well seeded and not a single drop was able to leak out of her stretched pussy. She shuddered, turning her head to the side so that she could rest it in the crook of his neck as she stretched out her wings, feathers trembling in the afterglow. If he had not impregnated her this time, her heat would return, though she was sure that it would all be well, as it should be. Ruth would be pregnant and bear young, wolf pups with wicked teeth and much to learn about the mortal world and their heritage. She was glad that she did not have to remain prey to heat-addled lust. It would be so much more entertaining to satisfy true lust, demand climax after climax that her lover would gladly deliver.

When the knot finally softened, Ruth allowed his cock to slip from her folds, sitting up to untie William's paws from the bracket of the gasp lamp. He moaned and rubbed his wrists where the rope had worn lines into his fur, making no further complaint. Leaving him to recover, Ruth nuzzled down his body, kissing and licking wherever her nose brushed, and teased his cock with her tongue and lips. Though he groaned, protesting sensitivity, she paid him no mind, using her sultry skills to coax him back to full hardness, knot only half-deflated. She wondered how that would feel popping into her cunt, a second load to secure her breeding. Her tongue swirled around the base several times, tasting the lingering combination of their sexual fluids and his male musk, a potent aphrodisiac that stirred the lingering flutter of her heat. There was no harm in making quite sure that she was impregnated, after all... The wolf was hers to have as many times as he could accept her, until he was spent of all energy he possessed.

"My William..." She murmured, lapping sensually over his cock as he gasped for breath, chest heaving. "Will you stay with me forever, my love? I shall bear you as many pups as you wish, let my belly swell with the fruit from your loins."

A low growl ripped from his throat and she jerked her head up, eyes wide. Now that she had not expected. The wolf pushed himself into a seated position, reaching forward to grab her by the scruff of her neck. Though she whined, she moved with his paw, crawling up the bed to his side, eyes wide and pleading. She did not think he would hurt her – she would not allow him to – but the feral lust in his eyes made her shiver submissively, begging silently to be taken. All sense of the timid romantic, prim and proper, vanished, leaving a snarling, wild-eyed canine with a throbbing hard-on in its wake: a vampire bite from the canine breeds would do that to a mortal.

Throwing her down on the bed, he leapt on top of Ruth, cock trapped between their bellies as they wrestled for the upper paw. He slammed her paws down on either side of her head with a smirk that she would never have before attributed to him, forcing her thighs apart and thrusting deep inside her slick sex, dripping his own cum. He wound his fingers through hers in a surprisingly tender motion and hissed out a breath an inch from her muzzle, hips working like a piston as he used his position and leverage to pound into her. Ruth yelped and bucked, wings trapped behind her back. Part of her knew that she could break free if she wanted to, but she could not imagine wanting to get away from him. All she wanted was to be fucked.

Huffing above her, William nipped her neck much like she had sunk her teeth into his, lacking the fangs to drink from her as she had him. As he pushed over her, she wrapped her legs around his waist and stole a quick bite of his neck, fuelling his lusts to greater and greater heights. He was a demon, a creature of the night, thrusting into her as if they were the only two furs that mattered in the world. Snarling and snapping at his partner, William had long forgotten the need to be quiet and residents of the other hotel rooms grumbled at the echoing liaison, unaware of the true nature of the otherworldly tryst.

“You desired me, Ruth,” he growled into her ear. “Now you have me. Is this not what you wanted?”

It is everything I wanted, she tried to say, but could not get the words out as he lifted her buttocks from the bed with two paws and hammered into her. Breath harsh in her ear, the wolf became her entire world, body blocking out the room and beyond. The rope still hung from the bracket of the gas lamp and she barked a laugh, mirth swelling with encroaching orgasm brought on by his fevered thrusts alone. His chest on top of hers crushed all breath from her lungs and she howled her pleasure to the moon and stars as he spilled his seed into her waiting womb again and again.

That night, she left his hotel room a pregnant wolf, blood from multiple puncture wounds staining the fur on his neck. As he left his mark on her, she left hers upon him.

William stretched and groaned as he rose from the small writing desk, candle burned down to the wick. The early hours of the morning had crept upon him but he had finally finished the work that he had set out to do in ensuring his family’s estate in Boston was secured and cared for in the eyes of the law. Property ownership had always proven a treacherous area for him, especially in a city where building upon building sprawled further afield. One day, the sprawl would stop, limiting its growth, and then there would be fewer disputes over land ownership within its set bounds, or at least he hoped.

Blowing out the candle, he shrugged into his overcoat, intent on returning to his hotel for a well earned rest. He could even sleep in late the next morning. He had worked hard enough to earn it, after all. William dropped the papers into his briefcase and made his way out of the building, designed for temporary use and divided into various offices, locking the door behind him.

He had not taken three steps into the street before wings flashed across his vision and he started as a heavy, solid body thumped into his, pinning him back against the stone wall with a growl that he could only describe as lustful. He half-raised his paw, ready to strike down his attacker, when something stopped him – a familiar scent that he could not quite place in his sleep deprived state. The stranger’s paw pressed to his groin through his pressed trousers and he jolted, recognising the touch as intimately as he would a kiss.

The strange female laughed and cast back her hood, revealing the wolf who had caged his heart and taken it for her own, belly swelling with the seed of his loins. She snaked her head forward and sank her teeth into his neck, drinking deep of his life blood as he moaned and stroked her stomach, cock growing into her paw as if to her direct command. Ruth did not take enough blood to cause him distress, only enough to remind the wolf of the hold she had upon him, the otherworldly chain that he would never escape. He had to look after her young, after all – she would not want him getting any ideas about delving too far into his work as a lawyer when she had more important work for him to complete.

Lips and mouth bright red, she pulled away and laughed in the light of the full moon. Pregnancy suited her well and her lengthy black spilled down her back in a dark waterfall, gleaming with health that only a body of the non-living could truly boast. It was ironic in that way. She spread her wings wind and shadowed him from the street at her back as her paw teased his eager shaft into an insistent hardness.

“Does your lust so stir for me, my William?”

Licking a trickle of blood tenderly from his neck, she leaned into his shaky hold, sighing softly as his arms enveloped her in a warm embrace. She had missed that warmth. Though her heart did not beat, something that she had not known for many moons fluttered in her chest. She kissed his jaw and touched her nose to his cheek, feeling his arms tighten in response before uttering the words she had longed to hear.

“You are mine, my love, now and forever.”
