

Seeded by the Gryphons

Three beasts and the woman who sacrificed herself to them

Diana was used to the comforts of life, a city-woman living in the heart of London. Although rent was high, the payoff of the big city could not be detracted from and the young brunette thrived on the buzz of life never truly slowing down. Diana strode through the streets in a violet pea-coat that reached her knees, enjoying what passed for a languid Saturday morning as she bypassed Hyde Park, thinking to maybe spend a turn on Oxford street, milling in and out of the shops there. She had nothing to buy, however, and the sharp click-clack of her heels carried her to the Marble Arch where she paused beneath its white-grey curve.

Resting a hand flat on the cool stone, she closed her eyes, feeling the wind whip her fashion-scarf – purple with an erratic black pattern – up under her chin. The fabric tickled her face and she scowled, brushing it away impatiently. Couldn't even her clothes leave her to her damn daydreams? As much as she filled her time with the business of being busy living, she so rarely had time for the luxury of daydreaming. She would have thought her daily commute into the city office on the underground would have been time enough but a million other notions and ideas and plans and everything else in the whole wide world demanded her attention more than herself.

Diana sighed and leaned back against the monument, shoulders slumping. Maybe that was what was missing, that time. But why couldn't there be enough time? There was always too much to do, too much to think about. Her head spun and she leaned back into the cradle of the arch, hand caressing down the ruffled fabric of her blouse over her stomach. Chatter flurried around her like Autumn leaves caught by the breeze, but she set herself apart from them, lips parted to her imaginings.

She had it all. She should have been happy. So, why did she find herself so unhappy?

There was only one thing that could have made the life, every bit of which she'd carved out for herself, more ideal. Diana's hand tightened, painted nails cutting into her palm. Perfect, even. One thing could make her life perfect.

The gryphons.

Everyone knew of them, living in the wilds where no human dared tread. Well, it was not so much that human beings didn't dare go there, but more that they chose not to. Gryphons were vicious and there had been more than one case of them ripping a human to shreds when they'd wandered too far into their territory, thrill seekers and nature lovers alike. The gryphons didn't discern between a person's reasoning for straying too close. Walking on four legs, their front half birdlike with a wicked, hooked beak and their hindquarters resembling a feline, differing in colour to match their feathers. With such an appearance, it was a wonder that they'd ever managed to hide from humanity at all, truly, but the population was doing well enough on their own. As long as people didn't interfere, that was.

Diana shuddered, blinking into the slanting shadow cutting through daylight. The news articles should have been enough on their own to dissuade her. Her internet perusing uncovered more gruesome images, unsuitable to be released by the media. Anyone would have to be crazy to consider going anywhere near them without the protection of a vehicle or helicopter at the very least. The only safe way to observe the gryphons seemed to be from behind a barrier.

Diana licked her lips, heartbeat quickening. So why did she want to see them up close and personal? She inhaled deeply, bosom rising as her nipples tingled within the confines of her lace bar. She could feel it even then, pressing and smoothing over the hard nubs. It was one of her favourites, cupping her breasts like the hands of a long-time lover and the silken touch of a suitor.

She wanted a better suitor than a pale human, however, the only breed of male that London seemed to generate. No, a human could not match up to what she really wanted. Reeling into her fantasy, Diana took a quick breath, nostrils flaring softly.

In her mind, a gryphon with shockingly black feathers stalked her, beak low to the ground and large, round eyes unblinking. He ruffled his feathers as his grey, feline half followed, a long tail with a flickering tuft of fur waving sinuously from side to side with a mind of its own. Crooning softly, he fluttered his wings and ran his beak up the inside of her bare leg – why she was wearing no clothes at all, Diana did not know – questing for the secret he knew lay hidden. Or the treat that some primal part of his understood she secluded away.

Too close to discovery, Diana sucked in a breath, eyes closing, trapping her in a mental world, so much more delightful than crass reality.

The gryphon nuzzled up her legs, pushing his beak into the fragile barrier of her thong, the only sliver of clothing she wore in her fantasy – if it could even be called clothing. Her breath quickened, raking through lungs that suddenly didn't seem strong enough to draw in air when desperation clawed at her heels.

As the gryphon circled her, her eyes dropped, just like they did every time she'd had the fantasy before. Only this was the first time it had been so...so public. A pink rod bobbed below his stomach and her eyes tracked it hungrily.

His shaft... Well, that hard pole of flesh between his hind legs was like nothing she'd ever seen on human or animal. It tapered to a point, but the resemblance with anything human ended with the fleshy colouration. And even that was a darker pink than what she was used to, something more tender than a man could ever hope to wield. Boasting soft, spiralling ridges around his full length, the gryphon fluffed up his feathers and cawed, eyeing her up and down.

His shaft drooled a glistening drop of pre cum like a faucet, streaming down to the grass below their feet, and she licked her lips, aching to seal them around that breeding spire. It would be something to behold. She'd seen pictures, yet never the real thing. Too many pictures, if truth was told, feeding her late night masturbations sessions with an empty glass of white wine on her bedside table.

She squirmed, arching her back into the wall. Oh, how beautiful it would be if her fantasy was a reality...

Diana bit her lip, heat growing between her thighs. She pressed them together, moisture soaking into her underwear. She'd bought them to match her bra and now they were as good as ruined, a testament to her erotic thoughts.

Would it really kill her to make the thoughts a reality? She swallowed. Maybe the heat was getting to her – too much sun or something like that. People came back from the mountains of the gryphons cut up from head to toe, not babbling of escapades better saved for interludes behind closed doors. It just wasn't something that happened. It couldn't happen. They were animals. Animals that shouldn't have existed, true, but animals all the same.

She took a breath, eyes snapping open. What was life without a little adventure? Her thoughts whirled and she bit back a groan as she ground her thighs together, drawing out a tingle of pleasure through her mound. Fleeting, it was nowhere near enough.

She'd be careful. She wouldn't do what those who'd gone before her had done – oh now. Diana drew herself up tall, a smirk playing across her pristinely painted lips. She was smarter than them, smarter by far. She was the one who had done all her research. Wasn't that what all those articles had said? The people who had been maimed or died had been the ones who hadn't researched the gryphons properly. They'd rushed in, hell for leather, and paid the price for their haste. She, however, had been researching them for years. Diana grinned, confidence swelling with the flutter of her heartbeat. She knew better. Better than anyone.

It could be done. It could be so!

She laughed into the sunlight and spread her arms wide, welcoming it in.

It was settled then. If she had no time for her daydreams, then she would simply have to go out there and make them a reality. Then, and only then, would she finally be satisfied.

Turning on her heel, Diana strode briskly away from tourists crowding the monument, camera flashes going off in her wake. Not a single one of them knew what she was about to do, what plan she was setting in motion, and the thought made her smile, red lips curving up. Better than all of them for going after what her heart truly desired, she held herself tall and carved a route through the crowd.

She was going to give herself to the wild gryphons of the north.

*

A few days off from work. That would be enough time for her to have her fill, by her reckoning, although it pained her to say goodbye to her hardworking colleagues for a short time. Sales would go on without her and her commission payments would drop into someone else's pocket in the meantime so she was sure they weren't all that sorry to see her go for a few days. Her stomach churned at the thought of letting her hard work go to waste but there was nothing else for it. The time off was booked, train tickets had been purchased and her hotel was waiting for her on the border of the wilds. The Peak District counted as the wilds, didn't it?

Whether the mountains of the Peak District counted as totally out in the wilderness or not to a Londoner was beside the point. They were out of Diana's comfort zone – miles further north than she'd ever travelled within the United Kingdom – and, more importantly, they were home to one of the last pockets of gryphons thriving on the island. That made those mountains the perfect destination.

Booking herself into a tiny bed and breakfast for a couple of nights, Diana surveyed the mountains, holding her hand above her eyes to cut out the glare of late sunshine. They rose majestically beyond the window pane as she waited, a little less than patiently, for her key to be handed over. Her shoulders ached from the drive and she rolled them, wincing as a tremor of pain throbbed between her shoulder blades.

“Now, you know about the gryphons, don't you now?”

The owner of the B&B, a white-haired lady who walked with a short, business-like stride eyed her up and down as she led her newest guest to her room. Holding the key between a claw-like finger and thumb, she pursed her lips, toe tapping the bare floorboards until Diana conceded to what the woman probably considered her niceties.

“Yes, of course, I do.” Diana smiled. “Trust me, they're the very reason I'm here.”

Tapping the key against her chin, the landlady shook her head slowly.

“Too many have come this way saying exactly that. Not many have come back to collect their bags.”

Diana bristled.

“Is that supposed to be a warning?”

The woman raised an eyebrow and shrugged.

“If you take it as one, that's beyond me. Once the words have passed my lips, they're yours to do with what you will. If you want to go delving into the gryphon territory.

“What I was saying was, they come close to here too. Closer than you'd think.”

She nodded twice as if to convey to Diana exactly how serious her words were, although they washed over the young woman's head. Drowned in social politeness, Diana stood stoic, listening as she ached for solitude, body curving in towards the door she so wanted to be behind.

“So watch your back, city girl. They'll be there when you least expect it, oh yes they will!”

She flashed Diana a toothy grin.

“Let's not add another name to the books of people lost to the beasts, shall we?”

Not knowing what to say, Diana gave her a tight lipped smile and thanked her for her accommodation. She tentatively took the key from the woman's fingertips and made good her escape, leaning back into the door as she closed it behind her.

Who was she to tell her what she should and shouldn't be looking out for? Diana scowled and flopped on to the bed, bouncing on the too-soft mattress. The bedspread could have materialised from sixty years ago – at the very least – and reeked as if it had been there for longer. Patterned with gaudy, pink flowers, it glared at her and she groaned, turning her face from it. She could have gone to a hotel but no, of course she hadn't. Instead, she'd gone to the kooky little bed and breakfast in the middle of fucking nowhere with the crazy landlady telling her to watch out for gryphons. Whereas she supposed the woman had to warn everyone, regardless of their reasons for visiting the area, it still gnawed on her last nerve something fierce.

Her stomach rumbled insistently and she sat up with a groan. A B&B was all well and good, but there was no restaurant in sight. Car keys shifting in the pocket of her jeans, she stood and stretched her arms above her head, working out the kinks as evening sunshine slanted through the window.

Butterflies tickled her stomach and a wide smile that could not be stopped spread further and further across her face until her lips were stretched almost painfully far apart, so great was her glee. A drive before dinner wouldn't hurt. Just a little drive – she'd have to get dinner somewhere, after all. So what if the gryphons would be about so close to homes and livelihoods? She'd do fine, just fine.

Diana hugged her arms around her torso, bouncing on the balls of her feet as if she was a little girl all over again. She'd have to be careful, but maybe she'd even see the gryphons on her first night!

Strapping herself into the driver's seat, Diana grinned at her tousled reflection in the rear view mirror, only one eye and half of her face visible as she adjusted the mirror. Devoid of make-up, her skin could finally breathe in the fresh air, presenting herself in her natural form. Even though there were light shadows beneath her eyes, her heart lifted to the wispy clouds high above. She was perfect as she was – nothing more was required.

The gryphons deserved nothing less.

She didn't bother with a map, driving back to the main road and turning at the sign for the nearest town

“Gryphon Viewing Point,” she read aloud, fingers trembling on the steering wheel. “One mile.”

She paused, looking between

What could it hurt?

Diana swallowed hard, trying her best to focus on the increasingly windy, narrow road as she drew closer and closer to her destination. How could she think about something as mundane as driving when gryphons awaited her?

She took a deep breath. She couldn't get too excited, had to keep herself under control. There might not be any gryphons there at all and where would that leave her? Whether she saw them or not, she had a gut feeling that the view would be spectacular and that would have to be enough for her, at least for the moment. Stomach twisting herself into knots, she frowned and told herself that it wasn't as if she was going to be doing anything with the gryphons that night anyway. It was all going to be okay – she was just going to see if any were about, that was all. She swallowed, hoping that those wouldn't become 'famous last words' for her, although something clenched within her lower abdomen, butterflies dancing

The incline steepened and she pressed down on the accelerator, revving her little car as it climbed. It growled, grumbling under the strain – it was really built for darting about the city – and just about made it, crawling over the peak to present a sweeping vista. Gasping, Diana's lips broke into a smile and she pulled up at the low fence separating what looked to be the car park from the rolling mountains of the Peak District. Reaching for the clouds, they cut through the sky, dark as the dying rays of sunshine glimmered orange over their peaks. She turned off the car and sat there in the quiet, wind buffeting the car as it picked up, eager to carry her away. Diana wasn't at all sure that she would mind being carried away at all.

She leaned back into her seat, scanning the sky. Although she told herself that she was grazing the clouds with her gaze for weather changes and simply to enjoy the scenery, her heart knew what she was really looking for. Her fingers fell from the steering wheel and she strained her eyes, searching and searching for a shape that could not be found – not as yet, at least. The gryphons were shy creatures to the human eye, not following any set schedule that could be discerned or recorded. The locals, clearly, were familiar with them also, if not particularly fond of the beasts. Diana shook her head. She couldn't understand such indifference to a wonderfully majestic creature. Truly, they were the beauties of the natural world, something believed to be a myth found to be very much so alive and thriving.

Reaching between her legs with a moan, the woman let her head slip back against the headrest, fingers slipping under her skirt to the sliver of fabric that was her thong. It wasn't the most practical attire to wear out in the mountains, but she was only going to dinner, she'd reasoned to herself. And she'd wanted to wear her new red skirt. She hadn't thought it would come in useful for getting intimate with herself in tantalising public, however.

Licking her lips, she closed her eyes and lost herself in mental imaginings, clutched to the belly of a gryphon in her mind's eye. Facing down, the woman cried out in sheer joy as they flew together, securely locked against the beast's belly by all four of his 'paws'. But the gryphon had not taken her so many feet above the surface of the earth for her to simply enjoy the view. Driving her fingers into her pussy, she moaned and arched as she imagined the gryphon's shaft easing into her, sinking in to the hilt in one, full thrust.

She moaned, an illicit thrill running through her. Anyone could drive up – anyone at all! And there she was up on an outlook point with her fingers buried in her sweet snatch waiting for the gryphons to come take her away. She giggled breathily, teasing her thumb over her clit. She could dream, at least.

Diana tensed, skin prickling. Something wasn't right. Her fantasy faded, slipping through her grasping fingers like water trickling between them. Something wasn't right at all. Turning her head slowly to the window, all blood drained from her cheeks.

A large, orange eye peered at her through the window and Diana shrieked, hands flying to her lips. Squawking, the gryphon shot back and eyed her distrustfully, feathers ruffled and one forepaw raised as if he would shoot off at any moment. She sat up straight, heart leaping into her throat, and pressed her hand to the window, lips parting in apology.

“I’m so sorry, boy, I didn’t mean to scare you!” She breathed, whisper carrying louder than intended. “Wow... Oh my...”

She trailed off, lost for words as she sat back and admired the beauty of the animal, head tilted to one side as he observed the woman as she took him in. Clad in bronze feathers and a rugged, tawny hide, his fur gleamed with health, tinted with the auburn glow of the sunset. His stomach swelled fat and full beneath his fur – certainly a gryphon that was not lacking for good – and Diana squeezed up closer to the window, losing her fear. He moved off, body shifting as if he was to be the epitome of grace in everything he did, and she sucked in a breath, biting her bottom lip lightly.

“Wow,” she breathed, fingers trembling as they clutched the strap of her bag. “You really are a beauty, aren’t you?”

The gryphon was as curious about her as she was about him. As the beast stalked around her car, she couldn’t help but shiver back into her seat. The size of a pony, the gryphon would have dwarfed her on the ground, his bulk outclassing any canine she had ever come across before. Muscle rippled beneath a hide, bragging power, and he rapped his beak experimentally against her windshield, testing its strength. Although she did not truly expect it to break, Diana inhaled sharply, eyes wide. It held, however, keeping her and the gryphon separated – at least for the time being.

“Easy, boy,” she murmured, slipping out of the car with her heart hammering in her chest. “I’m not going to hurt you.”

The words sounded stupid on her own tongue – just what, exactly, did she think she was going to do to hurt a gryphon? – but they slipped out all the same. In all honesty, they provide more comfort to her than the beautiful monster.

He observed her, tilting her head to the side as she dug into her bag for the food bag she’d prepared earlier, crooning softly all the while. She could poke it through a crack in the window for him. Maybe then he’d come back for more later? Her breath quickened. Maybe he’d come back for her if her offering was good enough.

“Aren’t you a one, hey there, boy? Out here all by your lonesome? I’ve got some nice, fresh meat here for you, yes, I do!”

She pressed the button to wind the window down and frowned when nothing happened. Turning the key in the ignition, the car rumbled into life and she tried again, to no avail. Snapping at the scrap of meat through the window, the gryphon flapped his wings and licked the edge of his beak, talons scraping through the dirt. Hitting the button again, Diana’s pretty face contorted.

“Fuck!”

It was no use – it wasn’t going to work. Slamming her free fist on to the dashboard, she could have screamed. Of all times for the damn thing to decide to break, it had to be when she had a real, live gryphon outside her car waiting for the treat of meat she'd brought for him! She realised in the back of her mind that she was calling the gryphon as if he was a male and could only reason that, in her mind, he was certainly a male. Yet she had not seen enough of him to truly confirm that.

Pawing at the ground, the gryphon bucked like a horse and beat his wings hard enough to lift his body from the ground, hissing all the while. Her heart pounded, twisting with sympathy. How could she be so cruel to bring him a slice of fresh meat and then hold it tantalisingly behind a barrier he simply could not penetrate? Diana's lips hardened into a firm, thin line.

There was only one thing for it.

Taking a deep breath as the gryphon retreated, evidently deeming her less than worthy of his time for the moment, she put her fingers on the door handle, blood dripping down her palm. Just barely brushing it, she hesitated, wondering if she really had the guts to go out there and feed the beast, hand to beak. A twinge caught her stomach. She couldn't just leave the poor thing go hungry. That would be mean. Her mind scolded her and Diana's lips twisted. She was being rash, she knew she was. It was ridiculous to think she could just pop out there without further preparation.

Yet it didn't matter. Her heart knew she was going to do it anyway, regardless of how much her mind screamed.

She opened the door and stepped outside before she had the chance to lose her nerve, leaving the door swinging over behind her. It juddered in the wind, but stayed open – just. The gryphon tilted his head to the side, one large eye studying her with what she chanced was respect. Diana shook herself, knees shaking. She couldn't see something like that in the eyes of a beast – it was impossible. He was hungry, that was all.

Clinging to the strip of red meat with a trembling hand, she held it away from her body, extending her arm to its full length. The gryphon clacked the edges of its beak together, talons raking through the dirt as he stretched out his neck, eyes bright with the lure of what he was forever on the hunt for: food. It didn't matter that he at least appeared fat and well fed. There was always room in such a bottomless pit for more.

Diana grinned.

"Here you go!" She called, pulling her arm back in a low swing that would send the meat sailing somewhere, hopefully, close to the gryphon. "Sorry it took me so long, boy!"

Releasing the meat, she watched it fly through the air and land with an ungainly thump on the grass. The gryphon laid his wings against his back and leapt, screeching as he pounded, so like a feline that it was difficult to discern the two in the moment. Snatching up the meat in a beak that closed with sharp smack, he wolfed down the meat, ripping it in half and tossing each morsel up in the air to swallow them whole. Awestruck, Diana stood still and quiet, reverently watching the beast feed. His throat bulged as he swallowed, meat travelling down to the pit of his stomach where she supposed it would swiftly yearn for more. Her fingers tingled. There was more food in the car if he wanted it. She'd do anything to keep him happy, if only he would stay around her a little longer.

The gryphon's head shot up and he growled as she took a step back, heart fluttering in her chest. Despite being only a few paces back, the car suddenly seemed far too far away.

"Easy," she whispered, voice failing her. "I'm not going to hurt you."

The gryphon dipped his head and prowled towards her, angling to the side so that she could see down the sleek curve of his body, radiating power. Diana gulped, suddenly feeling very exposed, irrelevant of the clothing covering her, skirt lifted up slightly by the wind. Her hair whipped across her face.

"Now, now..." She took another step back, voice rising in pitch. "I'm just going back to get you some more, all right..."

Diana shook her head and held out her hands in what she hoped the creature would see as an appeasing fashion.

"I'm not going to be long, I promise. Only have to get back to fetch you some more, hey, fella? I'll make sure you won't go hungry tonight, don't you worry, boy."

Her voice grew stronger and she pulled her spine straight as the car bumper entered her peripheral vision. She could get back to the car, grab some more food and everything would be fine, just fine. Her brow sweated, but her smile brimmed over with confidence.

Snapping, the gryphon leapt, quicker than her eye could follow. Before her mind caught up with what was happening, the beast's paws landed on her shoulders and bore her down to the ground, flat on her back with his breath hot in her face. Diana gasped, breath squashed from her lungs, and twisted back and forth like a snake as his talons bit into her shoulders. He hissed, pushing his beak into her face, searching for the meat he was sure she had somewhere on her body – somewhere. Squealing, the woman tried to push at the gryphon and swiftly yanked her hands back as his beak snapped closed where her flesh had been but a moment ago.

Heartbeat pounding against her eardrums, she sucked in a breath, but the oxygen wasn't enough for her gasping lungs. Too late – far, far too late – she wished she'd stayed inside the car, the strap of her godforsaken bag dangling off the driver's seat. She groaned, bending her legs as if she could push herself up and dislodge the animal, yet there was no point. The gryphon had her exactly where he wanted her and she knew it. She inhaled deeply, fingers twitching as she struggled to keep herself calm, breath even. There was no stopping the frantic pound of her heart, thrust into overdrive, though.

Was this it? Was this how she died? Diana's breath caught, lungs too tight to draw in a single scrap more of air.

Looming over her, the gryphon sarled.

"Get away!" She screamed, all thoughts of how she was supposed to behave around the animal vanishing from her mind in the blink of her eye. "Away, away! I have food!"

She reached for her bag, but barely twitched her fingers before the beast lunged for her, talons digging into her shoulders as he growled lowly. The sound reverberated through Diana's bones, breath coming in short, shallow pants. There seemed to be little need for breathing anymore, for surely it was about to become a mute point within minutes, if not seconds.

She closed her eyes as the beak dropped dangerously close to her face, edges parting. The rank scent of meat and blood washed over her face and she groaned, turning her face away. Throat too dry for speech, she moaned and screwed her face up, eyes closed, waiting for the end to come. It was surely time, time for her to go. She hadn't been able to mate with the gryphons after all. She hadn't even been able to feed one. Just like all the others, she'd gone and fucked it all up.

The gryphon blew hot air across her neck, tongue flicking out to lap over the hollow at the base of her throat. Shivering, Diana laid perfectly still, heart hammering so loudly that she feared the gryphon would hear it and slice her open with its talons. His beak nuzzled almost tenderly up her neck, pushing her chin higher.

His forepaws shifted down from her shoulders, talons grazing her breasts through the fabric of her blouse, and she bit the inside of her cheek hard to keep from screaming as pain flared. It would be nothing compared to the agony of the beast closing his beak around her throat. Hope fluttered in her chest and she looked up tentatively. The gryphon's head had lowered as if he was looking down the length of her body, pinned beneath him, with one eye at a time. Diana curled her fingers into a fist, striving to keep it from shaking. Maybe she still had a chance yet.

Pushing his beak down her legs, he snorted, tail lashing the air. He nipped at her blouse and skirt as if curious as to their function and design, though one paw remained firmly on her stomach. She didn't dare squirm, breath only faintly returning to her lungs.

Hissing, the gryphon nudged at her blouse where the hem fell over the top of her skirt, pushing it up over her stomach. She shivered as cool air swept over her stomach, but the gryphon's head was already moving lower and lower, talons pricking through her clothes. He flicked up the edge of her skirt with his beak, a low, warbling croon rumbling from his throat. She started at the noise, half-pushing herself up with her palms flat on the ground, but the gryphon shot her a look that could only have been described as a warning.

Stay there.

Breath erratic, Diana shook and sweated as the gryphon investigated her. Even when his paw moved from her stomach, she did not dare risk trying to move, instead lying obediently still while he took in every inch of her body.

Slipping his beak back beneath her skirt, the gryphon clacked his beak and she gulped, mouth dry, imagining his beak snapping shut on the tender flesh of her thigh. How long would she last with that artery severed through? Digging her fingers into the dirt, she pulled up sods of grass, tears dampening her eyes. Mabe she still had a chance if she just stayed still? Diana rolled her head back against the ground, sky spinning high above as sunset slipped into twilight.

Stretching out his wings, the gryphon nuzzled up the inside of her thigh until his beak brushed her underwear. Diana froze. The skimpy thong was suddenly very little protection against an animal and she wished, belatedly, that she'd worn something more substantial – as if cotton underwear would have given her any more protection!

Purring like a cat, the gryphon shuffled down on his forelegs, tail flicking from side to side, as happy as the cat who'd got the cream. Huffing, he blew warm breath over her legs and Diana gasped, the sound breaking her lips before she could control herself. Ear tufts twitching, the gryphon caught the sound and boldly investigated further, dragging his tongue over her inner thigh, dangerously close to her thong-clad pussy.

Diana's world tilted dizzyingly, emotion barring with something she wasn't quite ready to admit to, the heat rising once again in the pit of her belly, a ravenous, clawing need.

"What..." Diana's voice shook and she shivered, pushing her hips up from the cooling ground. "Oh..."

Lips forming a tiny, perfect 'oh', the woman shuddered as the gryphon's tongue found her thong. Plain and white, it portrayed an innocence that her trek to the mountains did not deserve, showing a dark patch of moisture where her arousal had soaked through even with her fear. The gryphon lapped, pressing his tongue up so that it swept through the soft parting of her lips, the tip of his black tongue catching her clit as it returning to his beak. She squeaked, heat rushing to her crotch.

Face burning, Diana looked up at the gryphon, seeing not the beast who had pinned her down but the suitor she desired. He squawked and flapped his wings, strutting back and forth before her as if to show off his leonine form. Every inch of him commanded awe and, if nothing else, his intentions were clear – crystalline.

His cock hung below his belly, a dark spire. As ridged as the ones she'd seen in images, it tapered to a point, widest at the base. She shivered at the thought of that breeding pole stretching her out. Just how would it feel sinking deep into her hungry snatch? Her lips grew slicker at the very thought of it and she spread her legs, planting her heels flat on the ground. The gryphon drew back onto his hind legs, flapped once more and dove in with an avian shriek, a wicked glint in his eye.

Diana groaned and held firm as he drove his head beneath her skirt for a second time, yanking it up against her hips. Though her heart beat harder than it ever did when she was jogging, pushing her body to its limits and beyond, she laughed recklessly, throwing caution to the wind. It fluttered in the breeze beside one of the gryphon's feathers and then was gone, like any inhibitions she had pretended to hold on to. Diana closed her eyes, lips parted in a grin. She was going to be bred by a gryphon! And nothing was going to stop her!

After all, it was what she'd gone there to do.

Diana rolled her head and moaned as the gryphon's tongue found her thong again, worming under the tiny slip of fabric to tease over her entrance. It dipped between her soft lips, scooping up her moisture, and pushed in deep, crudely demanding entry to the treat he felt he deserved. He had driven his female down, had he not? Diana trembled and pushed up to his beak as he dragged it up over her clit, hands slowly going to his head and the feathered tufts of his ears.

“Oh... Good boy,” she murmured, “good gryphon. There you go now...”

The gryphon’s ear-tufts flicked towards her, listening to the sound of her voice even if he clearly did not understand. Slurping over her pussy, his tongue caught that pleasurable nub of flesh and she cried out, startling him. He hissed and swiped her leg, though she hardly registered the twinge of pain. It had become beyond her, a mere backdrop to the delectable main event as the breeze caressed her skin.

She was so wet that there was barely any friction at all as the gryphon’s saliva soaked tongue teased her – his temporary mate – to readiness. Moaning and arching up into his touch, Diana panted and begged with incomprehensible grunts and groans for more, for what she truly wanted. Words would not come and she regressed to a state of near animalistic need, teased to the point of desperation out in the open with a beast’s tongue buried between her legs.

And there was only so much teasing she could take.

Taking her chances, she pushed the gryphon’s head away and flipped on to her front. He hissed, lunging for her, a large forepaw pushing her shoulders into the ground. Holding her breath, Diana whimpered and managed to get her knees beneath her, scraping through the dirt. Any animal could have recognised the position – an open invitation – and he growled softly, tail flicking as if he was pleased with her act of submission.

She flipped her skirt up over her back as he moved off, head dropping to her raised backside, his hard shaft twitching as his stomach muscles flexed. Like an equine, he made his cock jump and bob as if with a mind of its own, drooling a stream of pre cum to the grass he stomped flat.

The gryphon’s tongue swiped over her pussy and she whined, wriggling her rump as if she could somehow persuade him to get on with it, to stop teasing her. Yet the gryphon had other ideas. Even as she wormed her thong down her legs and left it hobbled around her knees, he merely played his tongue into her sex and up over the tight pucker of her anus, drawing a tingle of sensation from her that she had never before anticipated.

Stepping over her, the gryphon’s cock slid over her rump, smearing a trail of pre cum in its wake. He hissed, bumping his beak into the back of her neck as she arched her back at a vicious angle, breath sticking in her throat as she moaned, begging him without words to mount her. Diana bit her lip until it bled, fingernails digging into her palms. She’d wanted it for so long and it was finally about to become true! A reality! She readied herself for the gryphon’s penetration, fighting against instinct to relax and allow him in as the tip of his shaft grazed her inner lips.

Diana gasped as a shadow fell over her and turned her face into the soil, dirt sticking to her lips as the gryphon gouged the earth with his talons. Screeching at a deafening pitch, he leapt back from her and spun to face a dark shape sweeping through the sky, wings pointed out. Screwing up her face, Diana shaded her eyes, struggling to see what had gotten him so riled up. Her pussy ached, so close to the pleasure she craved and yet still so far, pulled away in the last possible moment.

But something else loomed. The shape wheeled and shot higher, too quick to be any bird.

More gryphons. A lump blocked her throat, disallowing breath for a heart-stopping moment of sheer panic that had her clawing at the ground like an animal herself.

Something in her chest clenched, jaw falling slack in shock she could never have anticipated. How could it be? Gryphons lived alone, defending their territories viciously! Diana shook her head, clenching one hand into a fist. It was all going wrong, oh so very wrong. She'd bargained on one gryphon, not many gryphons. And there she was, out in the open with nothing to protect her but one crazy gryphon that had already taken a liking to her tight pussy.

Slinking low to the ground, she flicked her eyes between 'her' gryphon and the spiralling shape far above. From such a distance, the black speck could have been mistaken for any other bird, maybe even a bird of prey, yet she knew the truth. The bronze gryphon cawed and lifted himself on to his hind legs, wings beating the air. The gust of wind smashed into her back and Diana grunted as she abruptly found herself sprawled in the dirt, air forced from her lungs.

He leapt to face the diving intruder, wings spread to make himself appear much larger and more intimidating than he was. Diana shivered, scrambling back on her hands and knees. As if he needed any help in being intimidating! His rival plummeted to the ground, sleek in white feathers with black struck through that reminded her of the spotting on a Dalmatian, without a care for the snarling gryphon he faced. Coolly flinging out his wings, he dropped to the grass with surprising delicacy for a gryphon and screeched an ear-splitting greeting. Diana clapped her hands over her ears and curled into herself until the sound tapered off, ears ringing fiercely.

Her gryphon eyed him warily, feathers fluffed out as they prowled around one another. He seemed cautious to let the black and white gryphon close to Diana and kept his body between them. Something pulled in her chest and she pressed her hand to her breast, eyes wide. Was he protecting her?

A moment later, a second gryphon – this time with forest green feathers and a grey coat of fur – slammed into the ground beside them, flaring out his wings to pull up at the last possible second. Diana shrank back, hair falling over her face as the gryphons snarled and hissed, primping and preening like suitors before a queen.

She held her breath, lungs screaming. One, two, three – including her first gryphon, the one with feathers that shone like copper, darker now that the sun had shimmied from sight.

She froze as three pairs of predatory eyes turned on her in perfect unison. The new gryphons cawed and snaked out their necks as their cocks dropped, easing from a hidden sheath as if they had been waiting for her – just her – all this time. A fleshier pink than the bronze gryphon's shaft, they dangled eagerly, awaiting her attention. Diana sucked in a breath, gnawing the inside of her cheek as dirt ground into her knees and the gryphons snapped at one another, knowing there was a prize at stake.

There was only one thing Diana could do.

Knees knocking together, the woman bowed her head and turned, presenting her rump to the gryphons like a mere animal. She ducked her head down to the grass and inhaled its sweet, green scent, cheek nuzzled into the dirt. With her skirt and blouse ripped – when had that even happened? – she could only imagine that she looked a right sight with mud smeared across her face, but Diana could not bring herself to care. She had three gryphons to take care of. She groaned into the ground. That was if she could convince them to share. She shivered. To share her.

The gryphons growled and she shuddered, keeping her head down as talons sliced through the air. Evidently the creatures came to some sort of agreement among themselves – establishing the pecking order, so to speak – as she soon felt warm breath wash over her buttocks once more, tingling over her skin. Taking a juddering breath, Diana held still and groaned as the gryphon's tongue slithered into her pussy, twisting back and forth deep within her passage. She moaned, anticipating further teasing, but the gryphon's flexible tongue was swiftly and pleasurably replaced by the bulk of his body pushing over her back.

Stepping in close, the gryphon nuzzled his beak into the mess of her hair, his green-feathered chest soft and warm against her back. His shaft was what commanded her attention, however, gliding smoothly over her pale buttocks. He crooned and shuffled his hips in closer, tail flicking around to strike her gently with the coarse tuft of hair at the tip. She giggled, surprised by the tickle, and moaned quietly as his drooling cock-tip lowered and caught in her pussy lips.

She sucked in a breath not a second too soon as he screeched and drove forward, wings outstretched and quivering. They cast a shadow over her and Diana braced herself for the penetration that was surely coming. Yet there was nothing. A green wing flashed as he flapped and shrieked, jabbing roughly at her buttocks without hitting the spot he sorely wished to sink into. Alas, the woman was not the gryphon he was used to and he could not pull himself up on to her back, trusting her to take his weight, as she was simply too small.

Diana panted and tried to lift her hips, legs straining, but could not get herself high enough for the flapping, heaving gryphon to feel like he was mounting one of his own kind. He snapped his beak, driven mad by her scent, which only told him that she was a female suitable for breeding. Yet a female that he, somehow, was having trouble with. The other two males crooned and rapped beaks, scraping their forepaws through the dirt as they, not so patiently, waited their turn, cocks bobbing.

“Come on!”

She growled and slammed her fist into the dirt, earning her a sharp nip on the back of the neck from the gryphon. Swearing, Diana barely felt it, blood trickling wetly down her neck. It wasn't a bad bite, just a graze, and her attention was elsewhere. Dropping to one elbow, she teetered off balance and reached back, grasping the gryphon's slicking thrusting cock with one hand.

It drove between the tunnel of her fingers, jerking erratically, and she moaned without thinking. Oh, how she wanted it inside her! Why did the practicalities have to be so difficult? Fantasy had never been so trying, if without that tantalising edge of true satisfaction. Diana took a deep breath, calming the frantic pace of her heart the best she could. Her legs trembled.

Keep it together...

At least she had a 'helping hand' to guide him in.

Clacking his beak, the gryphon shifted his weight and stamped, though seemed to sense that she was trying to help him, in a way. Diana breathed shallowly as she drew the tip of his cock down to her snatch, letting the tip rub back and forth, coating it with her arousal. She flushed. How could she ever have become so wet from letting a beast mount her? It was unnatural. She'd never even been so slick when playing with her toys! Yet there was something about a living, breathing, thriving gryphon that kindled a part of her soul that had before been untouched.

His cock slipped down and Diana scraped together the last remnants of her courage and pushed back, allowing the first inch of his ridged shaft to spear inside. She gasped, ducking her head, and rounded her back, moaning loudly as her pussy stretched. Not built for a cock such as his, it strained around his length as the gryphon – instinct telling him that he'd found his mark – squawked and thrust in roughly. Crying out, Diana rolled her head, muscles tense and pressed her forehead to the dirt as he took her.

Bravely, she peered back under the length of her body, down past her heaving breasts, to where the gryphon's hind legs splayed. His pink shaft drove into her pussy as she watched, biting her lip to hold back her gasps, inch after inch sliding into her passage. Shuddering, she felt him tap the barrier of her cervix and the gryphon squawked above her, flapping his wings hard enough to buffet her with a downdraft of air. She pulled her head further down and panted as the avian pushed further over her, filling her up with every inch he had to give.

Diana's eyes rolled back into her skull, the gryphon purring as he bottomed out inside her for a second time. There was no going back. Stalking in front of her, the other two gryphons – her bronze beauty and black and white pride – displayed themselves for her, fluttering their wings and presenting her their flanks and hanging cocks. Rearing back on their hind legs, they flapped and keened, showing off all they had to give.

Moaning, Diana reached for them, yet could not bring herself to move from the mass of fur and feathers warming her back. She arched up into the gryphon's belly and murmured in response to his approving rumble, one hand flung out in front of her to the thus far unsatisfied gryphons.

"Soon!" She forced out, breath escaping her in a rush as the green gryphon gave a particularly forceful thrust, rocking her whole body forward. "You can have me soon, my...ah! You..." She screwed up her face, cheek pressed to the grass. "Ah...soon..."

She trembled, able to do no more than submit to the gryphon's thrusts as he claimed her. The ridges popped in and out of her cunny with every stroke of his thick member as if they belonged there. One ridge in particular caught on her clit with every thrust and drove a little more breath from her body as something peaked inside her, a spring winding itself tighter and tighter. She yowled like a feral cat, pushing herself back on to his cock as he tried to grind himself deeper and deeper, her snatch more easily stretching to accommodate him.

And Diana could only take so much pleasure. With a wild screech that sent her suitors flapping, she reached her first high, body twisting and writhing beyond her control. Her pussy rippled, muscles tightening without conscious will, milking the gryphon's shaft for all he had to give. He cawed and pulled his forepaws from the turf, flapping hard and sinking that last inch of cock into her right at the pinnacle of her high. Howling – for what reason did she have to be quiet? – Diana trembled as electric pleasure wracked her body, head spinning and spinning and spinning until she lost track of time and place, her world becoming one of sole ecstasy.

The gryphon, however, was a beast and could not hold himself back like a human male for the pleasure of his partner. In his world, spending too long mating could spell death and so he sped up, hindquarters throwing the full power of his body into every thrust. A low rumble built in the back of his throat only to be unleashed in a full-throated howl that was distinctly non-avian as he slammed his shaft deep, sheath grazing the lips of her pussy, and ejaculated with a shudder that rippled through his own body.

Perhaps sensing their time was near, the other gryphons paced back and forth, back and forth, eyeing Diana like she was a piece of meat. And, to them, she probably was. Only not the kind to be devoured by beak and throat. Groaning, the green gryphon nuzzled the back of her neck, lapping up the trickle of blood with a warm, soothing tongue that curled around to her throat. His cock, still within her, pulsed, sending spurt after spurt of thick, creamy seed into her depths, drooling out around his member where the ridges pulled her pussy lips apart.

Shivering, Diana slumped to the ground in the afterglow of orgasm, arms too weak to support the weight of her body anymore. Being claimed by a gryphon was better than her wildest fantasies, she thought dimly, blinking at a dizzyingly dipping and swaying world as faintness rocked her. The gryphon snorted as his cock was dragged from her pussy, slipping free in a drool of their mixed sexual fluids to hang limply beneath his stomach. Yet it refused to retreat into its sheath and twitched there, the tapered point angling gently down to the ground. She admired it, blinking as her vision cleared, and wondered how such a shaft had ever fit inside her at all.

A snarl startled her and Diana whipped her head around as the gryphon bristled, backing off with his head held high to expose his throat and wings fluttering close to the ground. The other two gryphons hissed and drove him back, charging with talons and beaks until he gave ground, conceding their catch to further attention. Diana swallowed, licking lips that were suddenly too dry, aching for a drop of water.

She'd forgotten she had more than one suitor to please. Crooning, her first gryphon, the bronze idol, tapped his beak lightly against her buttocks and rested his chin on her backside, tail swishing. Chirping, it was almost as if he was asking permission to mount her and Diana chuckled breathlessly, pushing herself back up on to her hands and knees. His cock swayed beneath his belly in open brag of his eagerness even if his actions did not quite match up with the needs of his body.

“Come on then,” she encouraged him, letting her chest rest on the ground as she reached back to spread her buttocks apart, revealing her sex. “Have me! Your friend has.”

She fluttered her eyelashes coyly at him.

“Don't you want to leave a mark on your hen too?”

He cawed and bobbed his beak. Diana laughed and raised her buttocks for him as he barrelled over her, tearing up the ground in his excitement to get to her. He needed no help finding his target, cock dropping to her sore pussy and pushing in halfway. She groaned and rolled her head back against his feathered breast as he keened and thrust, hindquarters working to claim her as his own. Or perhaps not quite his own. The black and white gryphon still watched with a hard, throbbing cock just waiting for her. Larger than the others, it seemed to swell even larger before her eyes, bouncing as the gryphon flexed his stomach muscles.

Diana gasped, dragged back to the bronze gryphon as he screeched and hammered in. Flapping his wings more than the first, he claimed her body and she growled as his beak lightly clamped around her neck. Large enough to encase her neck without causing harm, he held her in place, tail lashing, and purred, the vibrations rippling through her throat. Forced to keep her head up, Diana panted, breasts heaving for breath she could not catch, her aching cunny throbbing for something more. The first gryphon had stretched her out beyond any of her toys and this gryphon, as delightful as his harsh, driving thrusts were, simply wasn't as large.

The white gryphon with odd black feathers struck through was larger than both of them. He pranced back and forth, light on his paws, as she was bred, body juddering within the hold of her gryphon. He preened his feathers and eyed her, beak parted as his flanks shuddered in a series of short, sharp pants, sucking in her scent greedily through his nares. Diana moaned and locked eyes with him, cock grinding wetly into her pussy as his thrusts sped up, breath hot against her shoulder. Rumbling, the waiting gryphon fluffed up his feathers.

You're mine next, he seemed to say.

Why hadn't he, as the largest, been the first to take her? Diana trembled, wanting to shake her head, but unable to in her currently predicament. The gryphon grunted around her throat, hips driving viciously, and she yelped as he slammed into her cervix, uncaring that she had a limit as to how much she could take. The sliver of pain swiftly faded as he pulled his hindquarters higher, satisfying himself with popping his curved ridges in and out of her over and over again.

The beast eked his way to climax before Diana had recovered, pleasure curling into a low thrum below the surface. With a roar to rival any she'd heard from the lion in her local zoo, he spent himself within her, pulses of cum throbbing up his shaft as he teased the tip right up against her cervix. Moaning, Diana sighed as her aching neck was finally released, ducking her head down between her arms. He stamped and thrust in short, deep thrusts, dragging out his own pleasure until there was not a trickle of seed left to drip into her. He grunted and mused up her hair with his beak, yanking his cock unceremoniously from her pussy.

Diana could have screamed, pleasure tingling through her body without the tickle of climax. And now the gryphon was gone! Done with her before she'd come to her own high! Maybe she was being greedy, expecting a second orgasm so swiftly, but it was hard not to be aroused with the muscled beasts pacing around her.

Flipping on to her back, she pushed her hips up, planting her feet flat on the ground. Moaning, she pulled her pussy lips apart and gyrated her hips, begging in a stream of words that blended together in a mumbled blur of longing, incomprehensible to even a human ear. Hair clinging to the dampness on her neck, Diana pressed her thumb to her clit and gasped, breath filling her lungs and refusing to leave for one, heart-stopping moment.

The second gryphon backed away as Diana drove her fingers into her gaping pussy, her inner passage softening and tightening around her fingers even as she ground them in. Whining, she arched her hips up to the gryphon, who snorted and knocked away her fingers with the upper curve of his beak. Although she whimpered, planting her shoulders more firmly against the ground, she knew he had something better to replace her fingers. Something hard and throbbing, rubbing up along her inner thighs to her spread lips, sex drooling the cum of those who had already laid claim to her.

He peered down at her, tail flicking, and nuzzled the tip of his shaft up to her pussy. She groaned – it was like the kiss of a long-lost lover, familiar in its strangest. Her body quaked and she kept herself perfectly still as he half-squatted, bringing himself to a better height as his movement naturally pushed his cock into her.

Diana moaned and almost collapsed, shoulders abruptly aching from the strain of keeping her hips thrust so far up from the ground, all the pressure on her upper back. She squealed and made as if to kick, only catching herself in time as his cock spread her out further and further, ridges sliding in with a series of slick, wet pops. Rolling her head from side to side, the tangled mess of her hair tumbled around her face and she yowled as he ground in deeper, dipping his beak to nudge her cheek, crooning all the while. She clenched her teeth until her jaw ached, a tear rolling down her cheek. By the heavens, he was big!

She swore the gryphon smirked. Without waiting for her to adjust to his size – had she really even expected that? – he thrust, squeezing another inch of his monstrous shaft into her sore snatch. Though she groaned in protest, an erotic shiver shot through her and Diana strained to keep her hips high, eagerly whimpering for his length. The gryphon ruffled his wings, only too happy to oblige.

Rutted with such a massive cock, it was all Diana could do to hold herself in position. Yet she had no choice in the matter, the gryphon huffing as he could only fit a little over two-thirds of his long member inside. But he kept her on her toes, bearing the brunt of his thrusts. Whenever her legs buckled, caving at the knees, he screeched and slammed a forepaw into the dirt, demanding she make herself available to him. And she tried, she really did, forcing her hips up to meet his thrusts even as she cried out in pleasure and quickly encroaching sexual exhaustion. He was too much! Too large! But still the thrusts came, not caring for her comfort or pleasure, as much as he drove her to ever greater heights of ecstasy.

Her body succumbed to gravity at last and she collapsed, moaning as his cock pulled from her pussy. He clacked his beak impatiently and, as she scrambled up on to her side, lunged with vicious intent gleaming in his eyes. Catching her by the waist, he shoved her on to her front and yanked her stomach up from the ground before she'd even caught her breath, back flush with his feathers and fur. Scraping to get her feet under her, Diana grunted as his cock pushed at her thighs, pulling higher as she found her footing, the gryphon holding her up with a forepaw beneath her stomach. Standing on three legs didn't seem to faze him at all as he thrust experimentally, searching for his prize.

After a couple of thrusts that rubbed teasingly over her buttocks, he found what he was looking for and gave an almighty screech as he rammed in, filling her to the brim. All she could do was endure her thrusts and the pleasure that rose to a terrifying crescendo, driving her body over the edge and into a tumultuous eddy of ecstasy. She shrieked like one of the gryphons as she rocked in climax, imagining that the others were already hard and waiting to take her again. If she got to spend the rest of her life being filled with gryphon cock over and over again, Diana would find herself a very happy woman.

Keening, the gryphon snapped, talons digging into her stomach and drove in, shoving an extra bit of cock inside when she thought she couldn't possibly fit anymore. She clung to his forelegs, howling as his cock erupted inside and, though she shouldn't have been able to feed his cum within her pussy, she swore she felt the hot splashes of the beast's semen mixing with the others. As if proud of himself, the gryphon hunched his back, grinding his cock as deep as it would go without hardening even a little bit.

The black gryphon took his fill of her, claiming her pussy over and over again until he had spent two loads of seed in her and left her to drop on the ground, eyes rolling back into her head. The dark sky trembled above, the moon and stars glowing distantly as she stretched out on her back, a smile spreading across her face even as her eyelids drooped. The gryphons crowded around, framed by the night sky, as their eyes glowed and they knew, just knew, that their newest hen was well bred for the night. All they had to do now was keep watch over their prize. Diana's lips twitched. They kept watch over their hen.

One last thought crossed her mind as she slipped into unconsciousness with her skirt torn to pieces around her hips, darkness settled across the mountains.

Could gryphons impregnate a human?